The judge set a dollar bill on the step and weighted it with a stone, as the rest remounted. "Well, good-by, Anthony," he said. "We're nightily obliged."

He sprang into the saddle and the quartette cantered away. "My experiment wasn't a great success, I'm afraid, Shirley," he said ruefully.

"Oh, I think it was splendid," cried Nancy. "Do you suppose he really thinks those spooky things? I declare, at the time I almost did myself. What an odd idea—when the clock strikes thirteen," which, of course, it never does.

"Don't mind, Shirley," bantered Chilly Lank. "Ev'ry cock crows when coming sound the alarm and we'll try in body to your cousin."

They let their horses out for a pounding gallop which pulled down presently to a muffled strike from Betty Page, as her horse went into the air at sight of an automobile by the roadside.

"Now, whose under the canopy is that?" exclaimed Lank.

"It's stalled," said Shirley, as passed them by. "I'm afraid when the owner was trying to start it, and that Mr. Jefferson as first aid to the injured."

"Why," said Betty gally, "Ah know! It's Mad Anthony's troubleman, of course, come for Shirley."

CHAPTER VII.

Uncle Jefferson.

A red rose, with over a thing of beauty, is not invariably a joy forever. The white bulldog as he goddled along the sunny highway, was sunk in depression. Being transplanted by the Hallmarks from a country home he could not understand the wains of Chamble Ones met by the way, who seemed so glad to see him that they threw both arms about him, and then had to his neck 'kasome colored weeds that trickled and scratched—I would not be dislodged. So it was a chastened and shamed Chum who at length irrigated steadily into the seat of the stranded automobile beside his master and thrust a dirty pink nose into his palm.

John Valiant lifted his hand to stroke the shaggy head, then drew it back with an exclamation. A thorn had pricked his thumb. He looked down and saw the dragged flower thrust through the twist of grass. "A pup of wonders!" he exclaimed.

"Where did you get that rose?"

Chum sat up and wagged his tail, for his master's tone, instead of ridicule, had a dawning delight. Perhaps the thing had not been intended as a disgrace after all.

With the first sight of the decorative Valiant had had a sudden memory of a spidery old man with silver-haired gray-blue eyes and a gentle quavering voice.

"Walah! Yes, Marse, good wutah. He's yo'ses'."

The old negro nodded his head. "Good wutah," he said in the gentle quivering tones of extreme age. "Ya, Marse. He's yo'ses'. Come fom he cotah ob de yerf, dat wutah. En dah's folks say de coutah of de yerf is all fah. Ye reck'n de's right, Marse Chahmahs?"

"Now, how the devil do you know who I am, Anthony?" The judge set down his cup on the well-curb. "I haven't been by here for a year."

The ebony head moved slowly from side to side. "Ol' Antay don' mind no ma'ks," he said, touching his hand to his brow. "He see ev'thing heah."

The judge beckoned to the others and they trooped inside the palings. "I've brought some other folks with me, Anthony; can you tell who they are?"

The eligitious look wavered over them and the white head shook slowly. "Dey know young mars," said the gentle voice. "How many yoddahs wif yo'? One, two? No I don' know young yoddahs, eldah."

"I reckon you don't need any eyes," Judge Chalmers laughed, as he passed the sweet cold water to the rest. "Tell us these young ladies wants you to tell her fortune."

The old negro dropped his head, waving his gaunt hands restlessly. The judge beckoned to Betty Page, but she shook her head with a little grimace and drew back.

"Go on, honkie," she whispered, and with a laughing glance at the others, Shirley came and sat down on the lowest step.

Mad Anthony put out a wavering hand and touched the young body. His fingers strayed over the habit and went up to the curling brown under the hat-brim. "Da de li'l mistis," he muttered, "ain' afrahd ob ol' Antay. Dah's fah en de ahs' afrahd, en dah's wutah en de ahs' afrahd. Wondah what Ah gwine tell hah? What de colah ob yo hah, honey?"

Old Anthony's hand fell back to his knee. "Young mars' laugh at de ol man," he said, "but he don' know that de colah dat buhn mah hah's—de colah ob sol', en eyes like de eyes ob a child's ah big. Dah's en man gwine look in dem eyes, honey, en gwine make em cry fo' cry." He raised his head sharply, his lids shut tight, and swung his arm toward the North. "Dah's wuah he

Colonel [illegible], Who Will Govern Canal Zone.

[illegible] Colonel Goethals is a native of Brooklyn, but his family moved to Westfield, N. J., when he was a boy. He graduated from the West Point military academy in 1885 and served in the engineer corps of the army. He was appointed by President Wilson to succeed Colonel George W. Goethals, who resigned from the Panama canal service to return to Washington for that purpose. The new governor's salary is the same as that of the governor of the Panama canal, namely, $10,000. As chairman of the commission and chief engineer Colonel Goethals had been paid $15,000 a year.

The government is plain, straightforward, clean-living man, without any pretensions and no sensitiveness to criticism. He is a good soldier, really with snow white hair. His friends say he has never known little to him. He is a hard worker and is very man. His minor is the way, but George Washington Goethals. He was christened George Washington, but his father, Major Colonel Cullum, who accompanied him to West Point, early had his doubts about the lad and he name down as George Washington Goethals. After the appointment was made he wrote to the superintendent of the academy to have the name corrected, so the George Washington was changed to Clothiale. Colonel Goethals was born in Brooklyn, city of bridges and home of Brooklyn Bridge. He entered West Point in 1885, was graduated four years later and assigned to the corps of engineers. In 1907 he was appointed chairman and chief engineer of the Panama canal commission.

Coal Strike Investigation.

That the congressional subcommittee investigating the Colorado coal strikes is determined to get at the bottom facts is apparent. At the beginning of the hearings at Trinidad the witnesses were called in groups of ten each. Now it is proposed to call witnesses in groups of twenty.

THE MISSING BANK TELLER

Part a Dog Played in Clearing up a Mystery.

The country home of the Hubbs and also family adjoined, and Walter Hubbs and I gave to numerous same friends. Walter was fond of animals, I of books. Among his pets was a yellow collie, the most intelligent being of the species.

I remember especially an instance in evidence of this. One rainy day, seeing his master, I accompanied to walk around the house. Dick, the dog, was with me, and, whether we gave him up or not, we never knew, inferred that I was going for a ride and was rejected at the prospect of going with me. There were two roads to the place, and when I came to the point leading to the most, Dick was there. I left on. Dick looked up, surprised. I, inferring that I was intending to go out of the other gate, immediately went to it. When I opened the gate, holding to the gate, too, Dick's astonishment was beyond a doubt. "Why, I thought we were going," he said plainly with his attitude. Then, seeing just as I was not leaving the grounds, he went away disappointed.

Presently I was awakened by a scuffle in the orchard with a dog's mouth full of feathers. I kept down the lane and found Dick. He ran down toward the gate, indicating that I was to follow. I did so. I was not long in under standing him and after getting on some clothes went with him for a week several miles away. He led me to a hollow gate in fence, and when he got there looked about him surprised and disappointed, sniffing around, finally putting his nose to the ground, he followed a scent to the brook, where he lost it.

All this was unintelligible to me. After walking around awhile we went home. Dick was a messenger from the Hubbs to ask if Walter had spent the night with us, also he had left collar behind. At once I became to suspect that something was wrong with him, and Dick's actions confirmed me in my fears. Possibly Dick had been followed at the spot where Dick had led me, and some person or persons to remove their tracks from the dog had done away, whether in the brook I did not know. Dick had to the spot and led him up and down the stream to the bridge but he would pick up the scent last, and thousands to a dollar either in the act of lock of us I failed.

The sheriff Walter Hubbs was one of the most popular young men in the county, and the news of his disappearance caused great excitement. Dick, being deprived of his master, adopted me as such. I knew that master and dog had been fast friend. I became very fond of him and never went anywhere without Dick. Dick was my chum. The first winter that I went to the city I left Dick behind. The janitor of the house where we lived he was plying a flock of sheep.

Walter Hubbs had been tender in a [illegible] The conductor was fond Gifford, a young man who was a cousin of Dick's. Gifford was a great favorite with the conductor. Dick was in the habit of meeting the train when Gifford was on it. Gifford would take him home with him. One day he was missed from the train. The conductor was distressed Gifford, a young man who a couple of years, became rich in a peculiar way. I have forgotten how. Gifford was fine appearance with him. One day he was walking down the street with Dick in the street. I saw Griffin approach him. Dick was with him. Griffin was a big man, and Dick was a large dog. Griffin approached Gifford upon Dick, and, taking hold of the dog from falling the man by the throat, straight for his throat, he quieted and dressed him away, striking him with my cane at the same time. Griffin seemed very much affected by the assaulter, jolting and trembling like a leaf, but I was not surprised at this, as it is no light matter to have a dog suddenly spring at one's throat. I did not have an opportunity to apologize to the man, for Dick was so eager to get at him again I had to be muzzled and was taken away by main force, and Griffin disappeared.

That Griffin been some much affected with the dog's action had something to do with the mystery attending Walter Hubbs' disappearance. As it was, I put it down to one of those unaccountable freaks of a dog of some special person. But some months after this, when Gifford came home from his travels and he no better than a common swindler, the thought came upon me that while he and Walter were in the bank together the cousin must have had some reason for getting rid of the teller.

I asked the president of the bank for information bearing on the case and was confidentially informed that during the time referred to Griffin had been receiving a large defalcation, which was discovered only after it was made good.

After consultation with the Hubbs family I was authorized to employ a detective to get evidence, with a view of recovering our money.

It turned out that Hubbs knew of Griffin's defalcation and had told Griffin that he duty required him to inform the officers of the bank. Griffin made an appointment to meet Hubbs in the wood to talk the matter over.

Traverse City Record: Capt. Emery has solved the question of taking care of the fruit at Old Mission. He has built the "Ty-lo-ma" and purchased the "Helen E." a twenty-four ton boat, sixty-five feet in length and of ample draught. Two round trips will be made between Old Mission and Elk Rapids. The business men of those place have become interested and will build a harbor at the foot of the hill, where there is also on each side of this city, and the distance will be great enough to allow the boat to turn around inside the basin. The Pere Marquette railroad will build a side track to the place and fruit can be loaded right from the boat into the cars. This is the best arrangement that has ever been made for the great amount of fruit from the Peninsula, and the fruit growers should take advantage of this splendid opportunity of getting their fruit to market practically the day that it is picked.

Equal Suffrage

There is to be a nation-wide demonstration in favor of equal suffrage on May 2. In Washington, D. C., a chorus of a thousand voices will sing on the east Capitol steps. All of the larger cities in Michigan will observe the day. The Lady Maccabees have charge of the celebration in Big Rapids, and Jane Addams will be the principal speaker. Detroit is to have an elaborate automobile parade. Grand Rapids suffrage workers are to get out a sufrage edition of the Grand Rapids Press. Clubs and Granges are cooperating all over the state in favor of the cause.

160 unions were wiped out of Illinois by the vote of women at the recent elections held there. No wonder the liquor men of the state fought the suffrage bill so desperately. The vote of the women more than doubled the "dry" counties of the state. No town that was "dry" voted "wet." More than 10 per cent of the state is now dry, blooming into, by the help of the women, got rid of her 80 saloons.

The Democratic party in Colorado has chosen a former Michigan woman to be state chairman. She is Mrs. Gertrude Lee, formerly of Grand Rapids, and was one of the Roosevelt presidential electors.

The Republican party of Iowa has a woman state organizer, Mrs. Emma Blaker of Des Moines.

Winston Churchill says: "Woman suffrage does not mean, as some fear, the elimination of the home as the unit of our civilization. Experience is proving that there are no more vigorous defenders of the home than the majority of women voters in the states where the suffrage has been given them." "

Commercial fishing, so far as the catches are concerned is unusual, but there is an unfavorable offset in the stagnant market. Reports are that the city markets are glutted and prices are low, especially on trout, which are being thrown by local dealers. Some good shipments of whitefish are being made however. Very little market for perch.

In a ragged game of ball last Saturday Charlevoix high lost to Boyne City 10 to 4. The locals scored first inning in the first three innings of play and had they been able to withstand the onslaught of the visitors in the last three frames when Capt. To every new subscriber for the SENTINEL we will send "The Family Story Paper" one year, and both at the subscription price of the SENTINEL. This is a great combination offer and it is made greater by the addition of one of those handy kitchen implements. Come in and let us talk about it.

The Charlevoix Egg Product Co. has its new pulverizer set up and at work in agricultural line. The demand for this superior fertilizer has been so great that the company has been unable to fill its orders. Now, however, shipments will be large and prompt as we are always supply of cars by the railroad company.

A red-hot runaway occurred Monday morning, a big team and farm wagon tearing down the south end of Bridge street and bringing up well down Dixon avenue. Luckily no damage was done. Charlevoix has an ordinance prohibiting teams being left unhitched, yet not a week day passes that the city police do not see from ten to fifty teams standing by the curb unhitched. This and the automobile speed ordinance seem to be dead letters.

After July first a new postal rating goes into effect which will remove all restriction from money orders and make them negotiable currency. Heretofore it has been necessary to cash orders at the postoffice upon which the money drawn. Under the new ruling orders can be cashed at any office, regardless of the office to which they are made out, provided they are presented within thirty days after receipt. This new clause will be a decided convenience to commercial travelers of transients who have mail forwarded from city to city, as it will enable them to get orders cashed wherever they happen to be.

The first boat of the season of the Northern Michigan Transportation Co's fleet, to leave Chicago will get away from that city at 7 o'clock Tuesday evening, May 12. From then on until June 22 boats will leave every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, arriving in Charlevoix Wednesdays, Saturdays and Sundays. On the return trips, boats will leave this port on Mondays, Tuesdays and Saturdays. The S. S. Mackinaw will leave Chicago on her first trip of the 1914 season on Sunday, June 28.

Mr. Alexander is given a fine compliment in this promotion. The Charlevoix office is aspondrive and he will, should from a wide field of candidates. Mr. Alexander has many friends who will regret to see him leave. He was promoted to the Moore lodge with a handsome gold watch charm upon retiring from the chair of distinguished recently." The roots of the maple shade trees appear to have declared war on the lateral sewer connections. The lateral at the Hines residence on Park Avenue refused to do business last week and had to be dug up. It was discovered that roots from the maples had forced their way in through the joints and completely clogged the tiling for almost the entire length. Before the pumps were furnished this trouble was expected, but obstruction from the maples was not looked for.

A Mexican War Veteran

The annual reunion of Mexican war veterans will occur this year at Chillicothe, Ohio, June 9-10.

It is pretty generally known that Charlevoix has a veteran of that war in the person of Capt. John Beattie, (whose title of Captain, however is that of a minor manner.)

Capt. Beattie enlisted in Cleveland and served 18 months. He was in all the battles fought by Gen. Scott. He is 88 years of age, but hopes to be able to attend the reunion.

Another Pioneer Gone

Mrs. Diana Mason, relict of the late William Mason, died at her home in Marion on Saturday, aged 79 years.

William Mason and wife located on the farm upon which deceased departed her life in the early '60s. Mr. Mason died about thirty years ago, and at the time of her death deceased was living with her son, Fred Mason.

Another son, Chas. F. Mason, resides in California.

Interment was in Brookside cemetery, this city.

Donahue—Emery

Married, at two o'clock Tuesday afternoon, May 5th, at the home of the bride's parents, in this city, Mr. Wm. G. Donahue, of Hancock, Mich., to Miss Ruth Emery, daughter of R. A. Emery.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Quinton Walker. Only the immediate families and relatives of the contracting parties were present, but a reception was given from two to five o'clock, at which the attendance of friends of the bride was a procession of them of the citizens in which she was held in the town in which she was born and reared.

In the evening Mr. and Mrs. Donahue motored to Petoskey, from whence they left the same night for a short wedding trip, after which they will settle down in their future home in Hancock.

What They Did to Capt. Berdan

On Monday evening the old soldiers and their families to the number of 40 met at a social at the home of Capt. Harrison Berdan and wife, perpetrating upon them what is called a "Tin Lady" and all enjoyed a most delightful evening.

A caravan of the old soldiers revealed the fact that the two youngest, was 66 years each; the oldest 84 and the average age of the eleven present was 74 years.

A younger appearing eleven can hardly be found in our city, as was fully exemplified at the table where the ample repasts disappeared in a manner proverbial with all appetites.

Your reporter was invited to take the edge of the tables present but owing to the uncertainty, not to say difficulties, involved in the scheme, he very respectfully declined.

Pere Marquette Adds Five Big New Locomotives

New equipment is obtained in anticipation of heavy summer resort traffic. Five massive Pacific type locomotives from the Baldwin Locomotive Works have been added to equipment of the Pere Marquette railroad in participation of heavy travel to northern Michigan summer resorts. The locomotives are being put in perfect running order for the summer traffic which will begin early in June, advance season resort train dates from Chicago being announced for June 6, 9, 12, 16 and 19 and from Detroit and Toledo for June 10, the regular summer schedule going into effect June 28.

Chief executive officer William A. Garrett, who is a stickler for "on time" service, hopes for a new record for this train service.

The new resort special locomotives will timbers have 5 ft. 7 inch driving wheels, weight of 410,000 pounds and each locomotive weighs 377,000 pounds. They are equipped with superheater, Type of combustion grates and Walschaert valve gears.

BEAVER ISLAND TO THE FRONT

Three thousand acres of Beaver Island have been acquired by the Citizens' Reality Co., of Chicago, and an active campaign has been inaugurated to attract fruit growers and summer home seekers to that splendid Island possession of Charlevoix county.

Mr. John W. Cruse, of Honor, Mich., treasurer of the company, has made two trips to the Island this spring, and returned to the main land last Friday, having spent a week on the Island with county surveyor Robinson establishing boundaries and platting desirable summer home locations. It is well known that much trouble has attended real estate transfers on the Island, owing to defective titles. In the acquirement of these properties the Realty Co. has checked up every window heretofore vacating, and every acre offered to south-bo purchasers has an absolutely correct and unquestionable title.

The land lies at both ends of the Island, most of it contiguous to the lake in the vicinity of the island lake near the head.—a beautiful body of water swarming with bass and pickerel. Some of the greatest catches we have ever saw have come from this lake. Already several lots have been sold on the Island, and a lively movement is confidently looked for.

Beaver Island has long enjoyed just such a "shaking up," and we believe it is the beginning of rapid material development. There is no reason why this should not be so. The Island is in the "fruit belt," and possesses every natural condition for fruit culture as well as general farming. The soil and climatic conditions are identically the same as characterize the famous Grand Traverse peninsulas. Transportation facilities are now ample, but with the development that will surely come, communication with the main land will be more fully adequate to every demand.

When it comes to natural attractions and scenic beauty, Beaver Island possesses charms and enchantments that cannot be excelled anywhere. The old Mormon clearings, particularly in the vicinity of St. James, abound in ever-green clusters which constitute natural parks that rival any that the hand of man ever created. On east and west the waters of Lake Michigan stand as sentinels, and beyond the depths are brought hundreds of tons of magnificent lake trout and luscious white fish, a commercial industry that continues for nine months of the year.

Whichever way you wander in search of rest and recuperation you find spots where you wish to tarry, loaf under the shade of a broad spreading beech or shapely cypress, breathing the bracing breezes from the shimmering lake. If you have a rod and reel, perch and bass gratify your love of sport.

The people of Beaver Island, if they realize the possibilities in store for the Island, should put their shoulders to the wheel and co-operate with this enterprise, indeed they should become an integral part of the movement, as the monetary reward will accrue to them in multiples as the years pass. Beaver Island has a good mine in its soil, which lavish gifts of nature.

By co-operation we mean that the permanent residents of the Island should not only welcome outside capital and enterprise, but get "into the harness habit" themselves. We have often marveled that the farmers of the Island do not realize the fact that the most lucrative outlay they can make is the planting of orchards on the large areas of land that now produce only rabbits and jumper berries.

48,000 DEER IN THE STATE

44,000 in Upper Peninsula, Says Forester in Report 34 Moose

According to Lyle McGillivary, deputy state forestry warden, there are 48,000 deer in Michigan—44,000 in the upper peninsula and 4,000 in the north are part of the area south of the Straits of Mackinac.

Mr. McGillivary says there are known to be thirty-four moose in the state. He estimates the number of wild animals and birds, other than deer, as follows: Rabbits, 2,500,000; raccoons, 10,000; mink, 30,000; foxes, 10,000; porcupines, 170,000; otter, 15,000; bears, 8,000; bears, 5,000; partridges, 500,000.

He suggests that hunting in the southern peninsula be prohibited five years.

No event in the history of our city ever gave more pleasant and profit than the banquet at the M. E. Church, May 1st. The menu was furnished from each state will have their own table. Able representatives of each state and nation will hail of its guest. Mrs. Mc. on the charge of the menu. Dr. W. F. Kendrick D. D. will be the toastmaster. FOR GOOD ROADS

Delegates Asked to Meet at Charlevoix From all Over the County

Steps are being taken to form a Good Roads club in Charlevoix county. The club will have for its object the building and maintaining of good roads throughout the county. The need of some such organization has long been felt and the move is heartily endorsed. The club will be composed of representative men of the county who will work in harmony with one another to secure what is greatly needed, serviceable roads.

Wednesday May 13, delegations from East Jordan, Boyne Falls and Boyne City will meet with the town of Charlevoix, at this city, to perfect the organization. Those here who are interested are earnestly requested to attend this meeting and get the club started. After organization a strenuous campaign will be inaugurated and meetings will be held in every locality and everything possible done to encourage the building of a net work of good roads throughout the entire county. State Highway Commissioner Rogers will be present on Wednesday and give some pointers on how to undertake the work that the most good may be obtained. Commissioner Hamilton, of Grand Traverse county will also be present and address the meeting on the subject.

ADVISE ABOUT SPRAYING TREES

This Month A Critical Period For Fruit Crops. Diverse Applications Made

The month of May is usually a critical period with the fruit growers as it leads from the danger of injury from frost and other unfavorable climatic conditions the delicate flowers and fruit are likely to be greatly injured by the attack of various fungous diseases. If such grievous results are only be made to realize this fact and to understand that most, if not all of the ills can be prevented by thoroughly spraying the trees, the value of the fruit crop could be greatly increased.

These fungi develop on the leaves and fruit in the presence of moisture, and it has been found that if early infection has taken place the trees are thoroughly sprayed with either lime-sulphur solution or Bordeaux mixture, the development of the spores will be prevented and the fungi will not grow. In order to be effectual, the spraying should be repeated often enough to keep the leaves and fruit at all times covered with the spray.

In practice it is customary to spray fruit trees at least twice when the flowers buds have been opened so they show a pink or white color, as at this time it is possible to cover the flower stalk and calyx with a film of the spray. The second time is customary to spray fruit trees of all kinds when the flowers have been opened or are just

U. S. SHIP SHELLS CITY

Battleship Prairie Bombards City Following Attack on Sailors.

Mexican Troops Fire on U. S. Men From Housetops—Women and Children Flee to Vessel During Fierce Gale—Admiral Fletcher Sends Report of Engagement to War Department at Washington.

Washington, April 22. 7:32 war ran.

Among other orders from the secretary of the navy to block the port of Vera Cruz and seize the customs house, Admiral Fletcher, in charge of the American forces, landed marines from the Utah, Florida and Prairie and proceeded to take the customs house.

A sharp engagement between the American and Mexican forces followed. Four Americans marines were killed and 20 were wounded. Two hundred Mexicans were killed.

Accordine to the report from Admiral Fletcher the Mexican troops did not oppose the landing of the marines, but opened fire after the Americans had taken possession of the customs house. The Mexicans employed artillery in a desperate effort to drive the Americans out.

U. S. Prairie Shells Mexicans.

Admiral Fletcher ordered the Prairie to bring her big guns into play, and from her place in the harbor she proceeded to shell the Mexicans out of their position.

The Prairie was stationed to shell the city for the reason that she is of flatter draft than either of the big battleships and by approaching nearer to the water front could place her shells with greater precision.

All of this occurred while a great gale was gathering just outside the breakwater. The Mexican coast in the vicinity of Vera Cruz is subject to frequent visitations of "northers," among the most furious storms encountered anywhere in the world. These storms develop such violence that the customs house and other buildings on or near the water front are whipped with spray although the breakwater which protects the city is one of the best of its kind anywhere.

Admiral Fletcher reported that he was holding the customs house and the section of the city in which the American consulate is located. The customs house and the consulate are within a few blocks of each other.

U. S. Dead and Wounded.

The Admiral gave the dead and the men wounded in the first engagement were as follows:

The dead—Coxswain Shoemacher, Corporal Hagerty, marine corps; Seaman Pomeroy.

Cite Stops Refugees.

According to dispatches received from Vera Cruz earlier in the day the consulate was crowded with American women and children calling to be taken off in one of the vessels chartered by the United States and waiting in the harbor. The Leonidas was reported as ready to sail, but owing to the gale did not put out. She had accommodations for several hundred refugees.

Receipt of word from Admiral Fletcher that fighting had begun, and that four marines had been killed, galvanized the war and navy departments into immediate activity.

Washington, April 22.—The navy department received an official dispatch from Fletcher stating that the American dead and wounded have been removed to the ships. The Chester has reached Vera Cruz. In response to a wireless request from Secretary Daniel Rear Admiral Fletcher dispatched the following full account of the action of yesterday by the American forces. The dispatch is dated "Vera Cruz, off the coast," and reached Washington shortly after one o'clock.

Admiral Fletcher's Report.

Vera Cruz, April 22.—Twenty hundred marines composed the first landing party. They reached the shore at exactly 12 o'clock.

The tactical telegraph and cable offices were first occupied. Up to the time no Mexican troops were in sight but later they were discovered in force in the house tops and the church towers.

The first shot fired was by a private. It hit a marine near the cable office who died soon after.

Mexicans Opened Fire.

The fire was opened up by the Mexican forces at 12:15. At 12:45 five companies of marines were in action.

A steady fire was being delivered against the Americans from the old church tower, and to put these "out of commission" I ordered a quick field piece from the Florida, commanded by Ensign Craig, on the shore to the tower. This cleared the American consulate from all danger.

Marines Protected by Warship.

At 1:30 11ah landing force commenced to move to place in safety from the fire from the transport Prairie.

By this time the Mexican fusiliers had been driven out of the houses and the marines were sent to guard the British consulate.

The Mexicans soon got into action again and at two o'clock the firing had become furious. Up to this point two Americans had been killed and seven wounded.

Capt Hughes Warns Huerta General.

The Prairie was still firing occasionally and this had a quieting effect. At three o'clock Captain Hughes came ashore to make the observation of results. As he passed by the Florida's quarters he had a piece be called out to the firing squad.

"Are you having as much fun as you expected?"

At 3:30 Captain Hughes tried to get word to General Maas, the Mexican commander, that if firing did not cease the town would be bombarded. If this word reached General Maas it produced little result. Firing continued. The sailors held their position. The Jackies advanced along Second street from the water front and were stationed among the custom house buildings. This brings them close up to the principal plaza. Mexican citizens now declare that most of their troops are out of the city.

Senate Empowers the President.

Washington, April 22.—After an all night session the resolution adopted by the house, which authorized the president to use the U. S. army and navy to oust Huerta from the presidency of Mexico and punish those guilty of insulting the American flag, was adopted by the U. S. senate, 72 to 13, after many speeches that will be historic. Senators Lodge and Hoke set forth in their speeches reasons why the insult to the flag could not be the sole motive for interference in Mexico by force of arms.

Senator Root, once secretary of state, and before that secretary of war, and one of the accepted world's orators of his day, declared against it in the debate that justification of what is about to be done and what already has been done in Mexico cannot be rested on a question so trivial as guns that shall be fired in a salute of apology or by the manner of firing the salute is question.

See War Already.

Experts in foreign affairs take the ground that war has been proclaimed, and that the outrage upon American lives and property must be considered in justification of the intervention steps taken and of such other steps as may be taken. There will be an effort in conference to force the acceptance of the original resolution, which came to congress from the state department specifically mentioning Huerta as the object of attack.

But events of the last 24 hours may make this effort futile. The death of the marines at Vera Cruz caused more than one senator to change from opposition to the Lodge substitute expressed in the morning and declare that he would support a broad resolution, even if it led to a declaration of war.

Williams Fights Change.

Senator John Sharp Williams of Mississippi, who was the one member of the foreign relations committee to stick for the resolution in the form adopted by the house, to supporting the committee resolution in the hope that in conference it will be put back to its original form. His theory is that war is an easy thing to enter into, but a mighty hard thing to get out of, and that if matters can be limited to Huerta it will be possible for our forces to retire from Mexico as soon as the disturbance is driven out of the country.

Tense Over Marines' Death.

Manager reports of the engagement at Vera Cruz had filtered to the capitol when the senate resumed its session at eight o'clock. The four Americans killed in Vera Cruz, the 20 wounded, and the 200 Mexicans reported killed in the taking of the city, became the topic of the talk mentioned in hushed tones in every corner of the senate chamber, packed to suffocation.

As the shuttle of debate was thrown back and forth a full quorum of the house of representatives crowded the rear of the senate hall.

Speaking of votes taken already often referred to in the debate, Secretary of War Garrison, Secretary of the Navy Daniels, Postmaster General Burleson, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo and Secretary to the President Tumulty sat about the chamber. They listened eagerly and had whispered conferences as the discussion progressed.

The diplomatic gallery was filled with members of the foreign corps, with ambassador Sharpe Ritz of Great Britain at their head. As the house dragged along and the news from Vera Cruz spread through Washington, throngs of fashionably gowned women and spectators from every walk of life packed the galleries and thronged the corridors of the senate wing of the capitol.

The Republican side of the senate led by Senator Root, demanded that the "justification" proposed in the resolution for a movement in force against Mexico be founded not on the Tampico incident but on the long series of outrages against American citizens and their property, including this outrage in northern Mexico, where the constitutionalists are in control.

Senators Reed and James vigorously defended the committee resolution, declaring that the insult to the flag at Tampico justified all that the resolution provides for.

As the night wore on, and senator after senator demanded an opportunity to be heard, the atmosphere in the chamber grew more and more tense. Senator Fall of New Mexico made a lengthy plea for a campaign that would cover the length and breadth of Mexico.

"I shall not prolong this debate," he said, "for I believe that whatever action we shall take ought to be taken today. There should be no further delay."

Senator Root said that the foreign relations committee resolution, while omitting the name of Huerta, made it plain that it was directed against him. He expressed the "highest regard for the president and the highest confidence in his purpose.

No Question of Confidence.

"But we are not asked to express our confidence in him," he continued. "We are asked as a part of our duty here to declare a certain course of action in certain conditions to be justified." We are called upon to do our duty as the representative people of this country and our duty to the civilized world."

In his resolution, Senator Root said, called for "forceful armed composition of the de facto government, or a friendly nation to make amends for an insult to the flag of this country."

"We cannot justify this," he continued, "on our confidence in the president. We must justify ourselves before the conscience of the people of our country and before the eyes of the civilized world. What is that justification? Mark you I do not say there is no justification. I ask what it is."

Senator Root reviewed the Tampico incident as the "proximate justification" by the president. He said the incident was an insult to our flag.

War in Its Essence.

"Deeply as the president desires to limit the scope of his action to the maintenance of peace, all history and all the world know that the force of war cannot be quarrelled as well. It is war in its essence that we are to vote to justify. What will be the results of those incidents no man can tell.

Responsibility on Senate.

"In a situation of such seriousness such as now confronts congress it is well to remember the responsibility on the senate," said Senator Lodge in opening the debate in the morning. "The power to declare war rests under the Constitution with congress.

"When the president lays an international controversy before congress he takes the last step that precedes war. The president might have taken further steps, but he has come to the body which alone has power to declare war. I think he has done well.

"His resolution uses the word 'justify' instead of 'authorize.' The result will be the same. The resolution does not contemplate the declaration of war. The president has never declaimed any hostility toward the Mexican people. But this resolution carries with it armed intervention.

"The consequences of armed intervention are in many respects precisely the same as war. But they present a task less capable of speedy completion; less fertile in speedy glory of victories won and may bring a long period of the exercise of what would be the police power in a foreign country involving vast responsibilities, great loss of life, perhaps, and, after months and possibly years, possibly only the satisfaction of feeling that we had brought back peace and order and liberty to a distracted country."

"I earnestly hope that war is not in question," said the president. "We do not desire to control Mexico, nor to exploit her resources, but we do desire to be sure of a government there of deep and genuine friendship. The people of Mexico are entitled to settle their own domestic affairs in their own way. We sincerely desire to respect their rights. Mexico is torn by civil strife. Only part of the country is under General Huerta's control.

War Waged Against Huerta.

"If armed conflict should unhappily come as a result of his attitude of personal resentment towards this government, we should be fighting only General Huerta, and those who adhere to him, and give him support, and our object would be only to restore to the people of the distressed republic the opportunity to set up their own laws."

The president said there was no thought of aggression or aggrandizement on the part of the United States. He asked merely for approval of his intention to use his own prerogative as commander-in-chief of the army and navy to order the two branches of the military service into action for the purpose of compelling President Huerta to salute the American flag.

U. S. Consul General Slain.

Washington, April 22.—There is a rumor that Consul General Shanklin has been killed and about forty Americans injured in riots at Mexico City. No official confirmation of the report has been received here.

Women and Children Flee.

Vera Cruz, April 22.—Two sections of the special train bearing refugees from Mexico City have arrived here. A third section is expected soon. Most of the passengers on board the trains are Americans, the majority being women and children. There was no evidence of alarm among those on board when they arrived here. In fact, they looked more like a pleasure party than refugees from a danger zone.

CAPTAINS OF BLOCKADING BATTLESHIPS

These are the commanders of five of the American battleships sent to blockade the Mexican ports. They are: (1) Capt. John J. Knapp, commanding the Connecticut; (2) Capt. Joseph L. Jayne, commanding the South Carolina, (4) Capt. Robert L. Russell, commanding the Louisiana, and (5) Capt. Roy C. Smith, commanding the Arkansas.

BEVERIDGE IS NAMED TRIES TO KILL MAYOR

Roosevelt's Boom Is Launched—Colombia Treaty, Providing Payment of $25,000,000, Opposed.

Indianapolis, April 21.—The Indiana Progressive convention nominated Albert J. Beveridge here Saturday as the candidate of the party for United States senator. The nomination was unanimous and Mr. Beveridge has accepted. He was Republican senator from Indiana from 1899 to 1911.

The platform of the party, unanimously adopted, pledges the party to work for the elimination of all brewers and saloons in the state and indorses the Hobson resolution now before congress. The platform attacks the Democratic administration and criticises its Mexican policy.

Other planks indorse the initiative, referendum and recall for all elective and judicial offices, a state-wide direct primary law, the nineteenth amendment, equal suffrage for women, home rule for cities, elimination of the judiciary from politics, prohibition of injunctions in labor disputes, revision of state laws to eliminate inequalities, a minimum wage for women, free school books and a law to compel the filing of annual notice before a strike or lockout.

Another plank opposes the approval of any treaty with Colombia which provides for the payment of $25,000,000 to that country.

Senator Miles Poindexter of Washington launched a boom for the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt as the Progressive candidate at the Progressive party in 1916, in a speech before the convention.

Delafield, Wis., April 21.—Three cadets, members of the St. John's Military Academy here, were drowned but six were rescued after a violent squall capsized their sail on Lake Nagawicka on Saturday. The dead: J. W. Kelly, St. Louis; Donald Mengel, Hinsdale, Ill.; Fred Sprek, Farmington, Minn. The accident was seen from the academy by Walter Biggs on the shore of the lake. Mr. Biggs and two others immediately went to the assistance of the boys and rescued six, who were clinging to the side of the shell, the three others had disappeared in the water.

13 SLAIN IN FIGHT

SCORE OF UNION MEN SHOT

One Soldier, Eleven Strikers and One Non-Combatant Among the Dead—Colony of Tents Used by Miners Burned.

Trinidad, Colo., April 22.—Thirteen men have been killed and two score wounded in a battle between striking coal miners and state militia, which started in a canyon near Ludlow 15 miles from Trinidad, raged all day Monday and continued at night.

Firing ceased at ten o'clock, except for desultory shooting. At that hour the militia had surrounded a great body of miners in an arroyo near Bayless canyon.

Strikers are rushing from Trinidad, Walsenburg and other neighboring towns to aid their fellows, and it is predicted that the fiercest labor battle in the history of the state will be begun. Additional militiamen also are being hurried to the scene. The dead include one soldier, 11 strikers and one non-combatant.

The big tent Colony was destroyed completely by fire. The hundreds of women and children are being cared for by Pancho Villistas, who, with Louis Tikas, strike leader, is among the dead.

Private A. Martin of Company A, First regiment, Denver, was killed and Private Vaughn Fursell of Company A, Second regiment of Colorado militia, was shot through the breast and will die. Another soldier was shot through the shoulder.

All telephone wires are down and telegraphic service is limited to one railroad wire. A report from the military camp at Ludlow says that 49 strikers are wounded.

At union headquarters it was declared that no reports of casualties among the strikers had been received.

The military force totals about one hundred and fifty four hundred armed strikers are in the hills. An effort to send recruits from Trinidad was delayed by the refusal of the train crew to take out the train. Master Mechanic Roach and Dispatcher Willis finally manned the engine and Superintendent Abrams took charge of the train.

Strikers in the hills above Cedar Hill also are said to be exchanging shots with a small detachment of troops under Lieutenant Lawrence, in trenches farther up the canyon.

AMERICAN TROOPS ARRIVE AT THE BORDER

STIRRING SCENES AT NAVY DEPARTMENT

Washington, D. C.—Officers attached to the navy department are planning themselves on the remarkable promptness with which each turn of the events of the past few days in Mexico were met.

In the offices of the aides for personnel, for operations, and for material under officers toiled over the few hours spent in Washington by Admiral Fletcher, the first day—the assassination of Consul General Shanklin, the Tampico incident, the landing of the marines at Vera Cruz—there was no time for idle speculation. Orders for the dispatch of the greatest fleet of American war vessels ever sent upon a "business" errand had been promulgated, signed, and sent out of the office within six minutes from the time Secretary Daniels gave the first word.

Not since the days of 1898 has the navy department been so well prepared for action as it did at this time. When, early in 1913 it became apparent to President Taft that an army of potential complication must be sent to the borders of the Rio Grande, the war department, which occupies the westerly side of the same building, enjoyed all the activity and all the attention that by now showered upon the navy.

When at 5:45 Tuesday night the Norfolk shipyard pulled away from its dock, bound for Old Point Comfort, the last of the battleships, which the navy department, going to Hampton roads to bid the fleet godspeed, had all were in a holiday mood.

Suddenly the word came that the fleet was ordered to Mexican waters. It might be that there was a booming of war clouds on the southwestern horizon, but the spirit of worry was conspicuously absent. The sailors interested, seemed to prevail among the officers and civilian officials alike that the Mexican expedition, though war perhaps lurks in the distance, was about to prove a glorious lark!

Just you in Mexico City" was the jocular expression of many a young star board, each on his fire division at seeing active service.

Meanwhile was smoked and jammed with eager officers whose leave had expired by been curtailed, hastening to join their ships.

Officers' wives and sweethearts were on hand to see good-by. There were a number of blue-clad marines from the Washington barracks busting to supplement the marine complements of the battle fleet in the south. Also there were officers of the medical department going to Hampton roads to bid the fleet godspeed, but all were in a holiday mood.

SELECT DATES FOR STATE FAIR

MICHIGAN EXPOSITION THIS YEAR WILL BE HELD SEPTEMBER 7 TO 18.

HOPE TO BEAT WEATHER MAN

Lansing.—The Michigan state fair this year will be held September 7 to 18, in order to be as nearly independent of the weather man as possible and to put on a more varied and attractive exhibition, promoters of the Michigan state fair have decided to return to the 1914 exhibition to two weeks.

The parades of prize-winning live stock, the judging of the horses and cattle in the show rings, which were practically missed by visitors last year because of the bad weather, will be made big features this year. Also the open air band concerts, which the fair officials counted on, as well as the night horse show, were all washed away and because of the inclement weather in 1913.

The added week this year will also permit of a much fuller and more varied speed program. General Manager Dickinson is planning an even more sensational horse racing and auto speed program than last year. Muddy tracks hampered the turf champions and all but prevented any auto racing last year.

The added attraction of bigger purses and a longer day will induce the cream of the light harness world to compete at the September 7-18 exposition, it is believed.

Urges Women to Preserve Eggs.

State Dairy and Food Commissioner Jones of Lansing has issued an "eggs for a cold storage" campaign.

In a statement issued this week commissioner tells the thrifty Michigan housewife how to put a crimp in the cost of living with home-preserved eggs at a cost of one cent a dozen for preserving.

"A great many methods have been tried by food authorities to obtain some simple processes of preserving eggs and the one that is now universally informed for the preservation of eggs, is by placing them in a solution of water glass or silicate of soda," says Mr. Helms. "The Maine experiment station found that eggs preserved in this way at the end of 11 months were not distinguishable from fresh eggs either in taste or nutritive value.

"Water glass, known as silicate of soda, is a thick, gelatinous-appearing liquid. To preserve eggs, it is diluted with ten parts of water. The water should first be boiled and then poured into this for every five quarts of water one pint of water glass should be added and thoroughly mixed. The solution should be placed in some pail or jar in which it can be sealed after the process of preservation is over. A half-gallon glass fruit jar will hold by a number employed by the colleges during the last few months, the 44 per cent of land not now in farms, exists largely as land covered with standing timber, cutover timber lands, and areas and land as yet unreclaimed by drainage.

According to the statistics, Michigan ranks sixth among other states in the amount of swamp lands possessed, having a total of 4,400,000 acres of redwood, tamarack, swamp and overflow lands. Most of these lands, according to the dean, are particularly adapted to the growth of specialized crops, such as peppermint, onions and all sorts of root vegetables.

The array of soloists is unusually attractive, some of the best of the artists that have been heard at Ann Arbor in the last four or five years.

Lake Navigation Opens

Navigation between lower lake ports and Lake Michigan was opened for the 1914 season by the passage of three unloaded steamers all laden with coal for ports on that lake, and the passage of one downbound tug. Word received here for the master of the steamer Clemson stated that boats would have no trouble getting through. Of the three steamers to make the passage, the Edward Buckley was the first.

Many Acres in State Untilled.

According to a report issued by Professor Robert S. Shaw, dean of agriculture at M. A. C., Michigan has 12,836,352 acres of unimproved land, a large part of which can by proper methods be made available for farming.

It is declared by the dean that the opening up of this vacte territory will offer a settling field for the settlers and in the future will triple the state's yield of farm produce.

The dean attributes the slow development of Michigan's agricultural industry to the fact that it was only lately a timbered country. According to the data which has been gathered by a number employed by the colleges during the last few months, the 44 per cent of land not now in farms, exists largely as land covered with standing timber, cutover timber lands, and areas and land as yet unreclaimed by drainage.

According to the statistics, Michigan ranks sixth among other states in the amount of swamp lands possessed, having a total of 4,400,000 acres of redwood, tamarack, swamp and overflow lands. BLOCKADE TERRIFIC BLOW TO POWER OF HUERTA

The principal ports which will be blockaded are the following:

East coast—Vera Cruz, Tampico, Tuxpan, Alvarado, Coatzacoalcos, Frontera, Puerto Mexico.

The effect of the blockade would be felt around the Mexican frontier, "of course," nations. The trade during the fiscal year 1909-10, just before the Madero revolt, amounted to $225,000,000. The value of the exports was $100,000,000 and the imports $95,000,000.

The total value of Mexican imports through gulf ports was $5,000,000. The principal gulf port was Vera Cruz, with $26,000,000; next comes Tampico, with $18,000,000; Progreso, $7,000,000; Frontera, $1,000,000.

Imports via Pacific coast ports were of the value of $5,000,000.

Imports via its northern frontier were valued at $31,000,000, received through the Mexican custom houses, the chief importers of which were at Laredo, with $17,000,000; Juarez, $7,000,000; Porfirio Diaz, $7,000,000; Nogales, $2,000,000, and La Morita, $1,000,000.

There is no question as to the terrific character of the blow which will be dealt Huerta by the establishment of the blockade.

CONVICTS ON THEIR HONOR

They Do Excellent Work In Road Building

EXPERIMENTS SUCCESSFUL.

The National Committee on Prison Labor Reports Favorably From Various States Indicating That the Honor System Produces Good Results.

The practice of putting convicts on their honor, especially prisoners who are at work constructing or repairing highways, has now been tried in several states and is reported with much success by the national committee on prison labor. North Dakota, Oregon, New Jersey, Michigan, Ohio and Colorado are among the states where the honor system has been developed to the highest degree. Under the laws of North Dakota the board of control may employ convicts on the public highways, their expenses to be paid by the respective counties in which they work. The law also allows that the prisoners perform their duties under the supervision of officers who have no other duties than that, so far as possible, the law demands.

CONVICTS AT WORK ON COUNTRY ROADS ON PAROLE; ALSO SAND DUTY IN THEM.

Thus, the convicts are to be placed on their honor. Another feature of North Dakota's prison laws is about as unique.

"Each short term convict worked upon a county road may receive credit toward his time of his sentence for good conduct, and in case of convicts serving life sentences such privileges shall be given them as in the judgment of the warden is proper, but in no case that any sentence shall be so forfeited or shall be so given as in the judgment of the warden shall be improper."

Oregon has a law providing that under the honor system in Ohio only prisoners of less than 7 years of sentence of prison is thought, number of the whole penitentiary. While there are more than 2,000 civil there was no escape except in one instance between the year 1900 and 1910, or the eighteen months before that, all but seven escaped and returned to the prison "on the percentage of those who failed to serve their full sentences was 0.2 per cent. The record, says the report, compares favorably with results in the outside world.

Also in Michigan, where all persons convicted of drunkenness or vagrancy are sent to work on the roads in the end of a jail, the practice of trusting prisoners has been found successful. It is only that, but according to W. H. Gilkey, superintendent of the Michigan state prison, the restoring of convicts to work on the highways tends to offer some much needed relief. It was in Colorado, under Warden Thomas J. Tynan, that the honor system was put more to strong elements as were its permanent, and it is in that state and Oregon that the system has been most extensively developed. Governor Vessel of Oregon is a strongly in the national committee on prison labor, and the committee's report is based on the information of such men as Governor Vessel, Warden Tynan, etc.

"Our road camps are made up of from fifteen to twenty-five men, with a free man in charge, who lives and works with his crew. He is not a guard, and he is not responsible for the conduct of the prisoners, except insofar as he is responsible for faithful use of the word 'honor' shown.

PLAYGROUNDS IN STREETS.

Washington Has Been Following a Plan Successful in European Cities.

There is a movement on foot in Washington, some time interested in the welfare of the school children which bids fair to solve in many instances the problem of lack of playground during the recesses for the pupils of the public schools, a problem which, owing to the neglect of the school authorities of former years, to provide sufficient space for the increased number of scholars, has in many cases become a most serious one.

The solution of the trouble, as proposed by the movement, is to commandeer a certain portion of the street during the recess time. At the period the method of closing a public street against vehicular traffic or motor vehicles during the busy portion of the day seemed impracticable, but on limiting the application only to those schools that are not in crowded business sections and applying it specially to those in the residence quarters, where, indeed, most of the schools are—it has been found that, so far as remaining four objections that can be raised to the plan are concerned, the project is feasible.

The proposed plan is to set aside a block on the street contiguous during the recess time by means of ropes that can be readily adjusted to position so in the early in a few seconds. The barrier would thus be provided or "roped in" some of the other people almost in the middle of the street and at least the sidewalk.

The matter of making to dwellers within the block and some compromise arrangement could easily adjusted to the satisfaction of everybody. The plan has been tried in many of the leading European cities, and the citizens have been in many by enthusiastic in praise it seems.

Mexico City's Beautiful Avenue.

The Paseo de la Reforma, in the city of Mexico, the alameda remained always the unique, luxurious, Colonia, is an avenue which, either in conception or accomplishment, will last longest been with say in the world.

From the central plaza of the city around which the government buildings are grouped, runs the old Calle de Mexico, Calle de Tacuba, and Calle de Avenida Juarez, which runs past the Alameda, and to end in the Calle de Bucarelli.

From this point it stretches in a straight line for three miles to the executive mansion on the heights of Chapultepec, a broad, fundamentally paved thoroughfare. At each of five places in its length it widens out into a fine square, to called a round point or in London a circus, but which in his virtual speech, the Mexican has called a "glorieta." In the first of these is a statue of Cuauhtemoc. In the second one of Columbus, too next to deliberate of the Aztec Mexico, the dominant monument the lively audience of the nation, and the best wants the hero of Chapultepec.

Moreover, the great avenue is not a simple boulevard. At one side, lines ing across a narrow, tree lined lawn, a paved footway is reserved, along the far side of which, facing the main boulevard, are numerous monumental stone seats. Both of this is another road lawn similar to the first and then the roadway upon which the buildings face.

BEST TIME FOR ROAD DRAGGING

KEEPING A ROAD SMOOTH.

The Best Way to Drag It to Begin at the Side Ditch and Go Up One Side of the Highway and Then Down the Other in Blending Direction.

The best results from road dragging come when the roads are dragged directly after a rain, says an expert in the American Agriculturist. The surface of the road is leveled, the holes and ruts are filled up and the earth is loosened, and if the dragging is done at the time, making the road much more smoothly than it would be if dragged at any other time.

To keep a road smooth and crowns the best method is to drag with an ordinary wood road drag, made of two two halves of a log which has been split with the adze, to which six or eight inches in thickness are added a wood road beam. The beam and these feet apart with the smooth surfaces fronts and parallel. They are fastened together with braces set in holes bored through the log.

If logs are not easily found a board can be placed on top, and the beam set upon it. This will cost a dollar and a half. In some cases it has been found desirable to add a piece of board to the lower edge of the forward piece of the drag. This comes the surface of the ground better and does more efficient work.

The road drag would work fairly so that it slants across the road in such a way that a small stream of water will take place the smooth free of the log toward the middle of the road, thus forming the crown. In this way the edge of the drag smooths out the ruts and fills up the holes.

The best way to drag is to begin at the side ditch and go up one side of the road and then down on the other.

PASEO DE LA REFORMA, ONE OF THE MOST BEAUTIFUL AVENUES IN MEXICO.

DRAINING AT SIDE DITCH OF ROAD.

The next trip the drag should be started a little nearer the middle, and the last trip over the road the drag should work close to the middle itself. Small ridges of earth will be thrown in the horse track and scraped by the some side of the log smoothly over the road. The smoothing of the earth by the drag is called polishing and it tends to make the surface smooth and hard and run off the water, especially after the sun comes out and dries it thoroughly. The road is always dragged after it has rained and not when it is dry. With a good strong pair of horses and a well built drag one can drag about three or four miles an hour a day. This is the most profitable way to maintain good earth roads. In many cases some farmers along each four miles of road should own a drag and drag the road when it rains, and he should and the road in good condition when no one is used.

The necessity for dragging the road comes about from the fact that water stays on the road surface, because it cannot drain away into the side ditches. If the road has been properly dragged the water will run off the surface. Then if the ditches are properly taken care of the water will drain away and leave the roadbed in good shape and condition. The crown of the road should be at least ten inches higher than the ditches. The crown of the road on a properly crowned road will run from the ditches and not into the surface.

The side ditches for surface water should run parallel to the right of way and should be open at every low point, so that the water can run out of them into neighboring brooks or streams. The ditches should be taken out from the road surface and be not many it may be necessary to have a culvert in the road, which will allow the water to run from one side of the road to the other. Culverts should be placed at the proper place in

The VALIANTS of VIRGINIA

SYNOPSIS.

John Valiant, a man usually favorite, suddenly realizes that Judith Vincent, the beautiful daughter of the richest family in the county, has fallen in love with his private fortune, the income from the corporation of the entire remaining Valiant holdings, which, with the exception of the family home, Valiant Hall, in Virginia, Shirley Hall, Virginia, Valiant Court, Maryland, and the Valiant Building, New York, he has lost in speculation. Valiant, in his desperate plan to win Judith, has asked her to be his wife, in consideration of a major's rank.

CHAPTER VIII.

What Happened Thirty Years Ago.

When Shirley rode across the lawn at Rosewood, Major Montague Bridgewater emerged from the library railings on his mother.

The major was massive-framed, with a smoky jaw and a rubicund complexion—the sort that suggests a predisposition to have inherited the utmost amount of gout to be conferred by a conscientious Christian on his children, little blue eyes were piercing and arched with brow ridges like ceilings, and a variant with his heavy iron-gray hair and imperial. His head was leonine and he looked like a king who has banished his enemy. It may be added that his lines was fine and imposing here, his black straight as precisely tied and a pair of spectacles of tortoise-shell was set in a flat black cord against his white waistcoat.

"Shirley!" said her mother, "the major's brutal, and he shan't have his pleasure!"

"What has he been doing?" asked the other, her brows wrinkling in a delightful way she had.

"He has reminded me that I'm growing old."

Shirley looked at the major sharpness, for his chivalry was undoubted. During a long career in law and legislature it had been said of him that he could neither speak on the tariff question nor defend a man for murder, without first paying a tribute to the women of the South.

"Nothing of the sort," he rumbled. Mrs. Dandridge's face softened to tenderness. "Shirley, am I?" she asked, with a quizzical, almost wistful smile. "Why, I've grown every one-tion I've ever had. I read all the new French novels, and I'm even thinking of going in for the militant suffragette movement."

The girl had tossed her hat and crop on the table and seated herself by her mother's chair. "What was it he said, dearest?"

"He thinks I ought to wear a worsted shawl and arctics." Her mother threw out one little thin slipper-foot, with its slender ankle showing through its open-work stocking like mother-of-pearl. "Imagine! In May! And he knows I'm vain of my feet! Shirley, if you find ever that I get so old that I lose my vanity, promise me you would have buried with me." "Yes, you would have buried with me." "Yes, you mean well, and I'll take back what I said about the hills. You can use it Shirley. Yours is even better than Rentz's."

"Who makes me one every day, Mon-ty?" she continued, as she drew off her gloves. "And who else isn't looking, I pour it into the bush there."

Major Bridgewater laughed as he lit the end off a cigar. "All the same," he said in his big rumbling voice, "you need 'em, I reckon. You need more than mind jobs, too. You have to have them on the doctor, and you take thinner and pull out for Hot Springs, don't you? Why don't you do a heap of good?"

She shook her head. "No, Monty. It isn't what you think. It's—here." She lifted her hand and touched her heart. "It's been so for a long time. But it may—it can't go on forever, you see. Nobody lasts."

"The major had leaned forward in his chair. "Judith!" he said, and she paled and twitched. "Is that true?" And then, "How do you know?"

She looked at him. "You remember when that big surgeon from Vienna came to see Mr. Valiant last year? Well, the doctor brought him to me. I'd known it before I'd a week, but had gone farther than I thought. No one can tell how long it may last. It may be years, of course, but I'm not taking chances."

He cleared his throat and his voice was husky when he spoke. "Shirley doesn't know?"

"Certainly not. She mustn't." And then, in sudden sharpness, "You shan't tell her, Monty. You wouldn't do that!"

"It's just, among us three, Doctor Southall and you and me. We three have had our secrets before, eh, Monty?"

"Yes, Judith, we have."

She bent toward him, her hands tightening on the chair. "After all, it's true. Today I am getting old. I may look only fifty, but I feel sixty and I'll admit to seventy-five. It's just that keeps us young, and I didn't get my last share of it. Monty. For just one little week my heart had been light as a girl's. And it's over. It was finished. It was finished long before I married Tom Dandridge. It isn't that I'm empty-hearted. It's that I've been an empty-hearted woman—so empty and dusty and dead-late as the old house over yonder on a hill. Do you—

"I know, Judith, I know."

"I've been unjust to Tom, too," she said. "But my heart's gone that way. You were never in love—really in love, I mean. Certainly not with me. Monty, though you tried to make me care, you were so nice, before Rasson came along, and—Beauty Valiant."

The major blinked, suddenly startled. It was not the one name startled him, but the other. He looked at her a little bewildered. Had she had turned away. "Everything changed then," she continued, frowning a little. "The major's fingers strayed across his satchel. Jealous? For an instant he was jealous. For an instant he, too, was back in the long-ago past, when his old Valiant had been comrades. It had been a curious three-sided affair—he and Valiant and Rasson. Rasson with his dissipated face and his—well, he was—well, he was—he was—he was—

Northern Michigan

Announcement is made that the state board of education has decided on Petoskey as the location of the Emmet county normal.

The village of Harbor Springs has voted to bond for $50,000 for the erection of a new modern high school building and for the purchase of a site for this. The new building will be situated on the bluff and work on it will be commenced in the very near future.

The East Jordan board of education has chosen an superintendent of their public schools for next year Supt. F. Holiday of Hellams. This decision was made after carefully considering about fifty candidates and spending much time in investigating the merits of the few who seemed best qualified for the position. Mr. Holiday is a graduate of Hillsdale college having received from that institution the A. B. degree in 1910. Mr. Holliday is a son of Rev. Mr. Holliday, who some years ago was a Methodist minister in this district.

Petoskey News: Sebastian Shomin, a well known Indian living at Cross Village, met instant death Thursday afternoon at Mackinaw City when his head was completely severed from his body by the wheels of the afternoon south-bound passenger train on the C. & E. I. Shomin, who was about forty-five years of age, was one of the better educated and industrious Indians of the north part of the county and the circumstances surrounding his untimely demise have not become definitely learned. For some time he had been working at Cecil Bay, and was known there as an industrious fellow and a hard worker.

Boyne Journal: Mr. Urquhart, because of his increasing law business has resigned as manager of the Converse Insurance Agency, and in his stead the First National Bank has secured the services of Mr. Carl Hallberg of the Michigan inspection bureau of Traverse City. For his age there is probably no young man in the state, actually engaged in fire insurance as Mr. Hallberg. He has had the territory north of Ludington for several years, wherein he has been inspecting risks and managing rates for the many special hazards in this northern country. The bank is to be congratulated on getting a man for their insurance office.

A. R. Willard, fifty years old, of Empire, for 24 years head bookkeeper at the Empire Lumber company, was found dead with a bullet hole in his right temple in his room at the Yeager hotel at Frankfort Saturday morning. Willard retired at 8:30 Friday night, leaving a call for 6:30 in the morning. The porter was unable to arouse him, and, breaking in the door, found him stretched on the floor undressed with a bullet hole in one temple and a revolver lying near by. Investigation by the coroner failed to show a motive. Letters he left were opened, but contained nothing to shed light on his death, and it proved that he had carefully laid his plans to take his life. He was perfectly sober when he retired at night.

Traverse City Record: Judge F. W. Mayne will address the Men's Study club of the Central Methodist Episcopal church in the club rooms at noon next Sunday, May 3-d, on "Conservation and the New Commonwealth." In addition to the knowledge gained by personal observation, which in itself would make Judge Mayne exceptionally competent to talk on this topic, he has made a special study of the subject for some time and has formed many decided opinions as to needed legislation, etc., which he will present. His address will be practical and it goes without saying that it will be full of good things and interest to all. All men are invited to meet with the club Sunday noon and hear Judge Mayne's address.

Cadillac News: Ad. Wolgast—In July, 1906, young Adolph Wolgast, barefooted and unskilled, cleaned up on a tribe of lithole bumble bees that had fortified themselves under a city sidewalk and dared anyone and everyone to molest them. Young Wolgast tossing for on the other side, decided then and there that he should be a world's champion. And it came to pass that he was. In 1909 he made Brother Tad Nelson in the right eye and high handed all the stops between the middle and the top of the pugilistic ladder. All used to box for money. Now he boxes for fun. If you don't believe it ask anyone who has hired him. He is more than I am a liar. Recently the United States Revenue collector took nearly all of Wolgast's income. He had a little over four thousand called income taxes.

Hundreds of walnut trees will be planted in Wexford county on Arbor Day, Friday, May 8th. County agent Hunter of a Wexford county rural school has sent to Mt. Pleasant for walnut trees for planting and County Commissioner Fauser will distribute about 300 more. The trees not only will be planted in the school yard but will be set out along the roads leading to the school buildings.

Real progress along any line of endeavor is obtained by increasing the results of labor, says the Traverse City Record-Eagle. This idea has created in the business world a force of experts whose duty it is to place enterprises upon a sound financial basis and by eliminating detail and waste make dividends replace deficits. What has been done in the commercial world can be done with equal success in the agricultural field. With this object in view a campaign has been launched in this vicinity which has for its object the growing of two potatoes where only one grew before. The success of the movement will depend entirely upon the attitude of the farmer. If he takes kindly to it and does his part he will not only profit by the action, but will benefit the entire region as well as himself. With an increased yield of the potato, business conditions would be improved and all would feel the result. Agriculture in the future will be worked out along this line.

Traverse City Record: At a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Grand Traverse Region Fair association it was decided to make Wednesday, September 23, Children's day, and that those under the age of 10 years be admitted free; those from 10 to 16 years, ten cents; and those over that age the regular admission. Efforts will be made to have this a holiday throughout the region. Thursday, Sept. 24, will be Region day, and the secretary was instructed to correspond with reputable aviation companies to ascertain if an expert aviator could be obtained to make flights during that day and possibly later. It was decided that all exhibits should remain in their booths until after four o'clock in the afternoon of Friday, the last day of the fair. Heretofore many of the exhibitors have been taking their goods away right after dinner, when there was a crowd present who had not been able to attend before. There are a number of improvements that the directors have in view that will be carried out before the time of the fair.

A Brilliant Benefit

The annual class of the Charlevoix high school, although "skilled better than they knew" when they booked the Williams Colored Singers.

There are colored jubilee singers and colored vocalists whose racial love of melody have charmed the big white world; but it is a farrago from "Suanee River" to Donizetti's sextet from Lucia de Lammermoor, or the Miserere from Il Trovatore, and these define the vocal boundaries of this splendid organization.

We have never, from white or black, heard finer voicing, more faultless blending or more delicate shading in expression or phrasing than we heard Saturday night at the Charlevoix Theatre. It was announced as a class benefit, but it was emphatically a public benefit.

Mediation Not Arbitration

In this little matter with Huerta, mediation should not be confounded with arbitration. The United States is not arbitrating anything.

In world diplomacy mediation means merely the acceptance of the "good offices" of a friendly nation, or a group of such, and in no wise has any binding force upon either party.

The functions of the three South American republics are not judicial in their effect. They are merely performing the "mutual friend," act in an effort to get the two belligerents together.

Meantime, there is no armistice.

Forearmed.

Mr. Cooke was a traveling man and was slightly injured in a railroad accident. One of the officials of the road went to his home to break the news gently to Mrs. Cooke.

"Madam," he began, "be calm! Your husband has met with a slight—that is, he has met with a slight—that is to say, one of the drive wheels of a passenger locomotive struck him on the cheek, and—"

"Why, sir," interrupted the woman, "you needn't come around here trying to collect any damages of me. You won't get a cent! If your company can't keep its property out of danger it'll have to take the consequences. You should have your employer insured."—Harper's Magazine.

You know about the turkey trot,

The bunny hop as like as not,
So to speak—

You know the weasel dip, of course,

And that great dance, the crazy horse,
The latest thing.

I love the real gorilla flip,
The kangaroo dip so fine and spry;
The proper place to give a hop
Is at the zoo.

SYNOPSIS.

John Valiant, a rich society favorite, suddenly leaves his home in Virginia and goes to the principal western gold camp, has failed, and he has come to live in poverty. Valiant, the wife remaining behind, is a Virginia gentleman of the old school, built day and January county, a wealthy tobacco planter, and a member of Romney court he meets Dabney and discovers that Dabney is Valiant's son. Valiant, Dabney, Jim Hunter, a Romney lawyer, and Judge Jefferson, a Romney judge, are the main characters. Valiant's father, not a gambler, but a gentleman, lost his fortune at Nine Numbers, a game invented by Nine Numbers, the Devil. Valiant's father, Colonel Tom Valiant, swore eternal revenge on the Devil and Nine Numbers, and Valiant, Dabney, Jim Hunter, Judge Jefferson, Colonel Tom Valiant, swear eternal revenge on the Devil and Nine Numbers. Valiant sets out to find Nine Numbers.

He trudged away into the shadows, but presently as the new master of Romney Court stood in the gloomy hall, he heard the shambling step come behind him. "An dere beglad dat yo' name, sah. Ah did, fo' sho'."

"My name is Valiant. John Valiant."

Uncle Jefferson's eyes turned upward and rolled out of orbit. "Mah Lawd!" he ejaculated scandalized. And with his wide lips still frozen about the word he backed out of the doorway and disappeared.

"Alone in the oblong twilight, John Valiant found himself. He spread a napkin on the broad stone steps and took out a glass, a spoon and half of a loaf of bread. The thermos flask was filled with water. It was not a splendid banquet, yet he ate it with a great content as the hollow of night fell around the alcove of the court. He broke his bread into the milk as he had on his first supper in Hallie, and ate the incisive pulp with a keen relish proof of the long outdoor day.

It was almost dark when the meal was done and, depleted hunger appeased, he neatened the empty cobalt house. He went into the library, lighting the great brass lamp from the motor and began to rummage. The drawers of the dining-room sideboard yielded nothing; on a shelf of the butler's pantry, however, was a tin box which proved to be half full of wax candles, perfectly preserved.

"Two thirds!" he said triumphantly. Carrying them back, he fixed several in the glass-candlesticks and set them, lighted, all about the somber room till the soft glow flooded its every corner. "There," he said, "that is as it should be. No big brilliant electric-light here! And no glare of modern electricity would suit that old wainscoting, either."

He dragged the leather settee to the porch and by the light of the motor lamp dusted it thoroughly, and wheeling it back, set it before the portrait which had so attracted him. He washed the glass from which he had dined and filled it at the drip of the garden fountain, put into it the rose from his hat and set it on the reading stand. The small china dog caught his eye and he picked it up casually. The head came off in his hands. It had been a bon-bon box and was empty save for a narrow strip of yellowed paper, on which were written some meaningless figures: 1789-95. He pondered this a moment, then thrust it into one of the empty pigeonholes of the desk. On the latter stood an old-fashioned leaf-calendar the date it exposed was May 14th. Curiously enough the same date would come tomorrow. The page bore a quotation: "Every man carries his fate on a ribbon about his neck." The line had been quoted in his father's letter. May 14th—how much the date and that motto may have meant for him!

He set to push the shutter wider and in the moonlight his elbow sent a shallow case of morocco leather into the floor. It opened and a heavy metallic object rolled almost to his feet. He saw at a glance that it was an old-fashioned rusted dueling pistol.

"The box had originally held two pistols. He shuddered at the thought to pick up the weapon, and with the crawling repugnance utilized a rather big paper and handkerchief. From his very babyhood it had always been as—that unconquerable aversion to the touch of firearms. There had been moments in his youth when this uncanny shrinking had filled him with a bitted fury, had driven him to extremes of courage. He had never been able to overcome it. Analyze it he could and did, but the peculiar abhorrence was no more outgrown of this, than the fear-sense he had variously, of recent years, met the test. Now, as he stood in this unaccustomed surroundings, with the cold touce of the metal the old shuddering held him, and the sweat broke in tiny beads upon his forehead. Sentimentally, he had, he crossed the room, slipped the box with its pistol between the volumes of the bookcase, and returned to his seat.

The bulldog, aroused from a nap, thrust a warm muzzle between his knees. "It's uncanny, Caesar," he said, as his hand caressed the velvety head. "Why should the touch of that tool thing chill my spine and make my flesh tingle over my bones? Why should I have a pistol? Do you suppose I was shot in one of my previous existences?"

For a long while he sat there, his pipe dead his eyes on the moonlit vista of out-of-doors. The very reaching that had gripped him had seized him quickly as it had come. At last he rose, stretching himself with a great yawn, put out all save one of the candles and taking a bath-robe, sandals and a huge terry towel from the steamer-trunk, stripped leisurely. He donned the bath-robe and sandals and went out through the window to the garden and down to where lay the little lake ruffling silverly under the moon. On its brink he stopped, and tossing his bath-robe and sandals on one of the bridge-rails but was unsuccessful. With a sudden gesture he threw of the bath-robe and stood an instant glittering, poised in the moonlight, like a sculpted bronze god, dove, straight down out of sight.

Five minutes later he pulled himself over the edge, his flesh tingling with the chill of the water and throw his robe about his cool white shoulders. Then he thrust his feet into his sandals and stood quietly back. He plodded himself to a glow, and blowing out the remaining candles stretched himself luxuriously between the warm blankets on the couch. The dog sniffed inquiringly at his hand, then leaped up and snug down close to his feet.

John Valiant's thoughts had fled a thousand miles away, to the tall girl who all his life had seemed to stand out from his world, aloof and unapproachable—Katherine Hunter. He tried to picture her, a perfect chatelaine, graceful and gracious as a tall white, silver-gilt lily, in this dead house that seemed still to throb with living pulses. But the picture subtly eluded him and he stirred uneasily under the blankets.

After a time his hands stretched out to the reading-stand and drew the glass with its vivid blossom nearer, till, in his sensitive, his musky odor mingled with the dew-wet scent of the honeysuckle from the garden. At last his eyes closed. "Every man carries his fate * * * on a ribbon about his neck," he muttered drowsily, and then. "Roses—red roses!"

And so he fell asleep.

CHAPTER X.

The Hunt.

He awoke to a musical twittering and chirping, to find the sun streaming into the dusty room in a very story-

He Shuddered as He Stooped to Pick Up the Weapon.

He rolled from the blanket and stood upright, his fling his long body to the dawn breath of sub-tropics. He felt singularly light-hearted and alive. Dabbing cause bounded through the window, dirty from the weeds, and flung himself upon his master in a canine rapture.

"Get out!" quoth the latter, laughing. "Stop licking my face! How the dickens do you suppose I'm to get into my clothes with your ridiculous antics going on? Down, I say! Hark! He from the kitchen chimney. He said something to her, and she nodded. The younger man, meanwhile, had flung himself from his horse, a wildeyed roan, and with his arm thrust through his bridle, strode forward among the welter of hounds, where he seized a fault, bitter and thither, yelping and eager.

"Hounds!" he called. He exclaimed. "Gone to ground after twelve miles! After him, Tweny! Yoicks, puppies! Do you imagine he's up a tree? After him, fulger! Bring him here!"

The hounds knew his voice the first time: saw the figure in breeds looking on. Valiant was attracted by his cries. He dashed and generally overlying its length. Marriage Ceremonies.

The early marriage ceremony among our Anglo-Saxon forefathers was of a very primitive character. It consisted merely of betrothal, or joining each other by the hand, and pledging love and affection, in the presence of friends and relatives. The bridegroom paid the father a price of money, called a "fostor-lean," or marriage portion.

Later the price was reduced to a regular system, and the lover was required to give a "wed" or security, for the performance of his contract, hence our word "wedding."

Once in long time a married man makes a speech of such fitting behavior as to make his wife say he talks.

BANNER POTATO CROP FOR 1914. In the neighborhood of 450,000 acres of potatoes will be raised in Michigan, according to estimates of authorities at the state agricultural college. The yield, under good conditions, will be more than 40,000,000 bushels, or nearly 10,000,000 bushels in excess of the 1913 crop.

The unusual acreage devoted to potato raising is the result, it is said, of an appeal from the federal agricultural authorities in Washington, which was endorsed by the state. The agricultural Michigan experts aid in promoting a campaign for increasing the crop which might result from the embargo placed by the government upon the importation of foreign potatoes. It is estimated that more than 17,000,000 bushels were imported during the last year, and with this market suddenly cut off because of embargo, it was thought that a much larger domestic acreage could be planted without danger of a shortage in the crop or causing a serious slump in prices.

Potato clubs have been organized in various parts of the state, and farmers are urging a larger acreage in the year to come. It is estimated that the value of the 1913 crop in this state was $18,480,000. In most markets in North this week, shippers are paying from 55 to 55 cents a bushel, and buying all offerings.

A Charlevoix county firm bought 5,000 acres of land and set 7,000 trees; and this spring is setting 15,000 more. The entire tract will be set to trees as fast as the clearing up can be brought about.

The W. H. White company of Boyne City has 160 acres in orchard 130 acres of which is to apples, 12 acres in cherries, and 48 acres of the apples are interspersed with cherries, making a total of 60 acres of cherries.

Small Fruits in Kalkaska County, Western Michigan.

Although Kalkaska county is the least developed, from an agricultural standpoint, of the twenty counties in western Michigan, it is destined to become of great importance because of its many acres of cut-over land. The demand for timber is only now being met by the lumbermen. However, the lands are in demand because of their growing value when cleared and cultivated. A careful estimate gives the number of acres in the twenty available for development at 280,000. The average size of the farms in Kalkaska county is about 80 acres. The above view is a scene on the farm of W. S. Palmer to the east of Kalkaska village, the county seat. Mr. Palmer has made a success with small fruits, particularly tomatoes.

PLAN TO RAISE MORAL STANDARDS

The ambition of those back of the program of development for western Michigan is that this part of the country shall become prosperous and be financially sound and healthy throughout the world as a region that proposes most of exceptional ability. To realize this ambition calls for the raising of the industrial, intellectual and moral standards of the entire people. Hence it is that we find that energetic and beautiful Valiants have taken up the work of raising the moral standards in this section of the country. Much has been accomplished in the way of raising the industrial standards, by means of illustrated lectures, field agents, demonstrations and printed matter the people have been taught to care for their crops more efficiently than ever before. The schools of the region have tackled the problem of raising the intellectual standards of the people by widening their courses so as to attract the interest of the school. Now the problem of raising the moral standards is being taken up, and some remarkable results are being secured. This problem is probably being worked out best at Bellaire and Benzie, two small villages in the central part of Benzie county. Here, under the leadership of the Rev. H. S. Mills, what is called the Benzonia church has about 300 members and is situated near the center of the parish, which is about twelve miles long and ten miles wide. Containing 500 families and 2,000 people. There are five other church organizations associated with the Benzonia church in the work of the parish. Three years and a half ago we reached out and annexed all the territory within a radius of five miles, and this territory has come to be known as the larger parish. Under this area lives consists of three men who give their whole time to the work—each assistant has his particular part of the parish to be responsible for, and the pastor has the oversight of the whole.

"Regular services are held in three different places, and ten Sunday schools are maintained, besides two Christian Endeavor societies and two weekly prayer meetings. Eight preaching services are held each Sunday, in one church, six chapels, three school houses and one private home. Occasionally rallies are held of the whole parish, when the other services are omitted and all come together under the trees in the summer time on the campus at Benzonia, with a morning and afternoon service and a picnic dinner between. Occasional rallies of the Sunday schools are also held, with gratifying results.

"Our Christian clubs have been organized in the outstations that serve as social centers, and keep clubs going in a high spirit. In the way of lectures, debates, concerts, social and musical entertainments, the work of the church is primarily a religious institution, and that the spiritual side is the most important.

"We have put considerable emphasis on the evangelistic phase of the work, and it has been most rewarding. While paying much attention to the social, recreational and industrial wants of the community, we seek to keep the spiritual and always in view the fact that the church is primarily a religious institution, and that the spiritual side is the most important.

"The Home Missionary society of Michigan has co-operated heartily in the development of this work, and it is regarded as an "experiment station" for the whole state. To those who are acquainted with this work it seems that it has passed beyond the experimental stage, and we are much encouraged by the results. In the larger parish this is presented a model of doing country work that promises to be successful."

Cost of Development Work.

The treasurer of the Western Michigan Development Bureau at the recent annual meeting of the organization, reported receipts for the last business year of $17,477 and further the year the counties comprising the district covered by this bureau contributed $7,235.92.

During the year there was expended a total of $17,324.49, of which amount $7,124.16 was used in operating expenses, $1,000 in publishing, $846.75 in giving 61 illustrated lectures, $875.91 for publicity service, $1,000 for a special publication, $175.84 to five orchard demonstrations, $184.32 for property accounts, and $248.26 for miscellaneous expense, while $2,148.26 was expended for "Summer Resorts" and $667.37 in holding directors' meetings.

SITE OF FORMER THRIVING VILLAGE BEING CONVERTED INTO ORCHARD

Thirty years ago, the village of Westwal, near Manceloua, in Antrim county, was a flourishing little hamlet and possessed the largest wood turning factory in the state. The founder of the village and the owner of its one industry first gained possession of the old Wetzel sawmill situated on the main line of the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad, converted it into a wood turning factory and then proceeded to build 5 village to house his employes, which he named Wetzel.

He then offered steady work, with house rent, fuel and water free, and some 200 men and their families accepted the offer. Frank Harding, the founder, then secured a post office, the G. R. & I. made Wetzel a regular station and put up a depot, and the success of the undertaking seemed assured.

For eleven years the village enjoyed a period of prosperity and then the turning factory burned. It was rebuilt and the latest machinery was installed which allowed an increase in manufactured products, which in turn decreased more rapidly the supply of surrounding timber. In time the timber was so depleted that the mill was not operated steadily and many of the men had to seek employment elsewhere. At the close of 1909, Mr. Harding had to cease operations entirely, which meant the ultimate desertion of Wetzel. The factory was dismantled, the buildings sold to farmers and moved away, the post office taken away and the name of the village erased from the railroad time tables.

Mr. Harding still retains ownership in much of the land where his former village stood and he is doing the very best thing that can be done for the neighborhood—converting it into a fruit orchard. Some one-third of the land will be growing one of the most magnificent bodies of fruit trees in this country. If all other former lumber barons who made fortunes in the north would do as well with their cut over lands as has Frank Harding, Michigan would be the garden of the region of Eden within the next fifteen years.

GREAT PEACH ORCHARD.

W. H. Roach & Co., canners, have one of the most valuable orchards in all the peach belt of Michigan. In the northern part of Ottawa county on a beautiful hillside they have a company has a full so acres of peaches in one tract. The land was bought in the fall of 1911 and set that spring and the same fall. As 70 of its acres has never been cleared maple shrubs had to be pulled. The cross fences were removed and the entire 80 was plowed before the snow fell. In the spring of 1912 trees were set, later being filled with varieties of yellow peaches. Sweet corn and pumpkins were grown between the rows of trees while the same were coming into bearing. The pumpkins were used in place of fertilizer, thus secure profit and amounted to nearly enough to pay for all land improvements. The trees are now common late bearing and the fruits are most concerning. These are about nine thousand trees in the orchard.

THE RIGHT MOVE.

Muskegon county residents are making a move in the right direction by setting white pine trees along the trees line highway. The state gladly furnishes the young trees at cost, which is about one cent each. In a few years, if other counties will join in the good work, there will be two solid rows of magnificent white pines from the northern boundary of the state to the south. The trees will be on one side of the lands along the line to pay for the trees and the boards of trade along the route to pay the cost of setting them out. Both sides of the road are to be thus treated. If every county in the state will follow Muskegon's lead, the legacy that will be passed on to other generations will be priceless.

STOCK GROWING REGION.

Northeastern Michigan is developing rapidly this year as a stock growing region. A score or more stock ranches are being started north of Bay City. Two South Dakota men are starting ranches on the Lake Huron shore. Henry Bennett is starting a large one in Otsego county, the Knox land tractor company of New York will feed a thousand head of cattle on its land near Lewiston, its people are starting ranches in Roscommon county, and a number of others are being developed. Who people who have been over the Dakotas and other western states come back and invest in farms in northeastern Michigan it means something. In a few years a big stock industry will be developed in this part of the state.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN A MECCA FOR FISHERMEN

One of the reasons why life is worth living in Northern Michigan is because of the excellent trout fishing. The streams are filled with trout and the straits there are hundreds of good trout streams which empty into lakes in which pike, perch, bass and other lake fish abound. That the streams and lakes are the resort of game fish is proven by the fact that annually thousands and thousands of minnows from scores of the larger cities to the south, east and west find their way to this territory contiguous to good fishing places.

The food fishing is due in large part to the fact that the state fish hatcheries pay especial attention to northern Michigan. One of the hatcheries is located at Harriotta, in Wexford county, where many varieties are propagated and in due time placed by experts in the many brooks, creeks and lakes. The state of Michigan spends considerable money on the Harriotta hatchery so that the bodies of water may be not merely stocked with the fry and never let the fishing get poor.

The accompanying views of Harriotta are some of the finest trout streams in the state, affording sport each year to thousands of anglers.

Harriotta a Fish Hatchery.

Home of Donald E McIntyre at Boon.

There are many elegant homes in the farming sections of northern and western Michigan, in many cases a pleasing illustration of the fact that good farmers are able to build a fine home. The soil of those portions of the state is so much more responsive to the toil of the other parts of the state that the average farmer lays by for the rainy day faster than south of the Grand River. There are more beautiful homes in northern and central Michigan among the farmers than in other portions of the state. This of course does not include the homes of the wealthy man on the edge of the larger cities, built but from the returns from the farms as much as from the returns from banks and other lines of business in which the city man prospers.

The illustration here shown is the farm home of Donald E. McIntyre of Boon, seven miles from Cadillac. It is a modern home in every sense of the word, and could not be duplicated in the heart or any city. It does none of its modern conveniences and is in territory contiguous to good fishing places.

The food fishing is due in large part to the fact that the state fish hatcheries pay especial attention to northern Michigan. James Stillman once received a group of British financiers in his banking in New York and entertained them at luncheon in the Metropolitan club. Afterward he confessed, saying that he had important business. "But you can use my big private car," he said, pointing to a splendid $15,000 machine that stood outside. When they raced past him they saw that the poor devil was Stillman, the head of one of the greatest of banks. He was puffing and they were riding. Subsequently they met

MUST CHANGE TO MEET TIMES

In the Very Nature of Things, Uncertainty Will Always Be a Portion of the Law.

Uncertainty must always be the portion of a large part of the law. It may assist toward such reform as to reduce various branches of the law into the form of a statutory code, but uncertainty remains. Society does not stay put; and if the code lies behind, it is no longer the governing law. New interpretations will be found for constitutions and codes, and new situations will arise for which no code provides. Napoleon is said to have congratulated when the first commentary appeared on the Code Napoleon, "Mon code est perdu." He was that, but he had no remedy. It the code acknowledged the fact that there are many sources of law other than statute and precedent and lived in the legal profession so much the worse for the legal profession. Hence, of course, it is the fact always has been, and always will be. If it tends to make insufficient judges to be law into themselves and to lay down new and arbitrary rules, we must raise the fact and deal with the judges. Society is high and absolute authority commanding us to "get understanding." What though in the process old ideas and old systems perish! It is certain that such an understanding of the function of the judge as a lawgiver, should improve him in a much greater sense of his responsibility.—Arthur L. Corbin in the Yale Review.

Recipes for Long Life.

A Germantown woman, whose "old age secrets are bright and lovely as a lapland night" has reached the ripe old age of 105 years, gives her recipe for longevity, records the "Philadelphia Record." It is a simple one. She refuses to worry, and she keeps abreast of the times. She likes young people. To all the gracious and hallowed memories of the last hundred years she has loved to keep her from sinking a benevolent sympathetic interest in the progressive age. She relieves herself of the cumbrous burden of the antiquated age. She is as young as the youngest, says the Philadelphia Record.

Fuller's Earth Supply Decreases.

"Fuller's earth, which is used for bleaching and clarifying or fitting of fats, grease and oils and particularly automobile lubricating oils, has gradually been decreasing in production the last two years," says Engineering Mining Journal. Up to 1905 it was imported from England exclusively for cleaning purposes. Since then deposits of this large deposits were discovered in this country and with the steadily increasing demand for lubricating automobile oil most of the American output has been used for filtering automobile oils.

STRENUOUS IN HIS PLEASURES

British Author Takes Chances With Life and Limb That Would Not Appeal to Many.

Ian Hay, whose carefree "Happy-Go-Lucky" has scathed an hour for many a reader, and to say reviewer, may have need himself of the easygoing traits of his hero, for he is certainly taking up two dangerous pastimes, motoring and politics. He writes a letter to an American friend:

"I usually ended my literary and other careers about three weeks ago by capsizing my motor on the way home from Ulster. I was driving along a Highland glen and rounding a sharp corner when suddenly I realized that I was going much faster than I thought. Next moment the car skidded right across the road, a tire burst and the wheel, never again under my waves. I was thrown out on the road, quite unhurt, with my language all to pieces. Luckily the car did not turn right over, so the chauffeur slipped it, or I might have been pinned underneath. Ultimately another car came up and we succeeded in getting the car back on its legs again. The extraordinary part of it was that I had resolved no particular damage beyond the broken bonnet, and a three-quarters of an hour of the accident I was on my way to Edinburgh.

"I have lately become a politician and have been adopted as prospective Liberal candidate for Kirkcaldy Burghs. It is quite a hopeless seat; there has been a reduced majority of 2,000 or so for the last 20 years, but it should be a most amusing contest.

Humor From the Hospital.

Perhaps the best story Sir Edward Cook's "Life of Florence Nightingale" is that of a wounded Crimean soldier who picked up a wounded comrade and stumbled back to camp. The rescued man turned out to be a general, and waited on his rescuer in the hospital. The latter wrote Miss Nightingale, exclaimed: "Oh, another! Yes, I'm a lucky man." Miss Nightingale glad I didn't know it was your horse." Wrote the hero in his turn, "I have saved you all the same."

They are most closely in touch with the rural regions, most deeply affected by those conditions and most fitted to lead in development and betterment of the problem. When the village churches shall get the vision of what needs to be done and what can be done, of their opportunity and their responsibility, and when they undertake with faith and courage to realize that vision to reality the problem will soon be solved.

It is not a wealthy or prosperous region, and none of them make more than a comfortable living, most of them owning their own farms and doing their own work.

The Alfalfa Crop

There is great interest being manifested among farmers in the growing of alfalfa this spring, and a greatly increased acreage will be planted. This crop has been found to be particularly adapted to certain kinds of land and is an admirable forage crop under almost any condition. When you need to plant! and directions followed for growing it it is known to the farmer and its general introduction will mean much to the thriving interests of this region. Several of the counties are conducting campaigns that will prove fruitful in establishing the crop and thereby raise the income of farmers. The plant is now well established in this county and some excellent results have been obtained by the growers. Further efforts are being made to interest more farmers in the matter of the crop and gain a still greater acreage in this county.

HUERTA AGREES TO MEDIATION TO AVOID WAR

Dictator Makes No Conditions But Probably Will Demand Instant Recognition.

SNAGS IN MEDIATORS' WAY

President Wilson, It is Believed, Will Not Consent to This Under Any Consideration—Carranza and Zapata Included in the Plan.

Washington, April 22.—General Huerta has agreed in principle to the plan of mediation offered by the plenipotentiaries of Brazil, Argentina and Chile, according to the announcement of the Spanish ambassador, who is in charge of Mexico's interests here. The dictator attaches no conditions to his acceptance, but it is believed he will follow it up very soon with a formulated series of propositions, and presumably the first of these will be a demand for instant recognition by the United States of his full rights as de facto and de jure provisional president of Mexico.

It is known definitely that the American administration will not consent to anything which looks like a recognition of the rights of Huerta to the place which he secured through the murder of Madero. Even if there shall come from Mexico a hint from Huerta of a consent to be eliminated if he be given a laissez-faire recognition, it is not thought for an instant in Washington that Mr. Wilson will yield the point.

MANY OBSTACLES IN PATH.

The representatives of the mediator nations must surmount a stone wall and make their way through a mass of entanglements before they can reach the field of peaceful parleying. When it comes to distinct proposals, the situation is tractable as compared with Victoriano Huerta.

In Washington today it is being asked how hopeful can anyone be of a successful outcome when the first proposal on the one side and the first proposal on the other are such as it is morally certain cannot meet with assent.

CARRANZA IS BIG FACTOR.

General Carranza is included specifically in the plan of mediation. There may be little trouble in securing from him a consent to go ahead on the line of the proposal of the United States, but his passivity may of itself make more active Huerta's hopeful expectancy of an alliance to eliminate him from his place of power and to make him an innocuous factor in the future.

There may be days, weeks or months of negotiations, but there will be no negotiations at all if there is insistence on Huerta's part that elimination shall not be considered as a requisite. Those who know the Mexican will insist, and so the feeling here is strong that the de' ay of war has only been postponed.

PLAN STILL IN DOUBT.

From the state department today has come final word that the three parties to the negotiations, the United States, Huerta and Carranza, have agreed definitely the principle of mediation. Now the question is, how is the work to be conducted, provided it can be conducted at all? It will be a difficult thing for the representatives of the mediating countries to confide by wire or by letter negotiations looking to a final settlement.

It may be that there will be a conference in some place lying within a neutral zone and that there the accredited representatives of the factions to the controversy will meet to do their work of peacemakers.

The standing for the conduct of later stages of mediation probably will be put forward into the uncertain future. Before anything can be done, Huerta is to be asked to consider the office himself. News from Mexico City makes it seem possible that he will be affaced, but that he will do the act of his own will, few Washington officials believe.

FULL TEXT OF THE MEDIATION PROFFER

(Letter Addressed to the Secretary of State by the Spanish Minister.)

"With the purpose of subserving the interest of peace and civilization in our american land and in the name of and to prevent any conflict bloodshed to the prejudice of the combatants and within which have always surrounded the peoples of the government of Mexico and of America, we, the plenipotentiaries of Brazil, Argentina and Chile, duly authorized hereby, have the honor to address your excellency's good offices and friendly good offices for the public interest in United States and Mexico.

"The offer goes in due form the acceptance which we have had occasion to offer hereinbefore to this address, the sincerity, to whom we renew our highest and most distinguished consideration.

"HUMBERTO DA GAMA, Brazil.
ROMULO S. NAON, Argentina.
EDUARDO SUAREZ MUJICA, Chile.

Reply of President Wilson.

"The government of the United States is fully sensible of the generous motives, the good feeling and disinterested purpose of the South American States which have joined in the proffer of their good offices to bring about a peaceful settlement of the present difficulty between the government of the United States and those who now claim the exercise of power in the republic of Mexico.

"Conscious of the purpose with which the proffer is made, the government does not feel at liberty to decline it.

"Its own chief desire is for the preservation of the cordial intercourse of her American neighbors which has been the source of much and prosperity which can spring only from the free and unhampered exchange and the friendship which is created by such intercourse.

"The generous offer of your governments is therefore accepted.

"This government hopes now more than at any prior time in its long career to speak for the several elements of Mexico such as may be willing and ready to discuss terms of satisfactory settlement, and should find them willing to meet in conference with us to make such provision for discussion in the frankest manner of the various questions and grievances that may be authoritatively formulated.

"The government of the United States and the president of a new government of Mexico, duly recognized as such by the government of the United States, will be in a position to act with the representatives of Mexico, if they desire, upon the whole range of questions which you propose for their consideration.

"It is, of course, possible that some act of hostility may occur which would disturb the military forces of Mexico and make it impossible for them to be in the assembling of the hopes of humanity and of the government of Mexico, to be willing to accept your generous mediation.

"We shall hope for the best, meanwhile, and we shall be ready at any moment to accept your kind offer if it should appear that the situation in Mexico is such as should informally facilitate the beginning of the conference.

ACCEPTS GOOD OFFICES.

Washington, April 22.—As shown above President Wilson has accepted the good offices of Argentina, Brazil and Chile for the mediation of the differences existing between the United States and Mexico, who speak for the several elements of the Mexican people.

The note of acceptance while agreeing to the representations reserves it out that an act of aggression by the military forces of Mexico or hostile demonstration toward American vessels might impose of immediate peace. Prior to the formal acceptance of the mediation proposed there was a conference at the White House between the president, Secretary of State Bryan, Senators Stone and Shively, Democratic members, and Senator Lodge, Republican member, respectively of the senate foreign relations committee, and Representatives Flood and Cooper of the house foreign affairs committee.

At this conference it developed that:

1. That the mediation should not be limited to General Huerta, but should be extended to General Carranza, General Villa and General Zapata.

2. That, as a condition of the cessation of warlike measures by the United States:

(A) Huerta should be required to resign.

(B) An orderly government should be set up.

(C) Peace and order should be established in Mexico.

(D) That suitable reparation be made for all insults to the American flag.

PROPOSAL SENT TO HUERTA.

The Brazilian, Argentine and Chilean envoys transmitted the United States' acceptance of their proposal to the Spanish ambassador, who immediately sent it by cable to the Spanish legation at Mexico City for presentation to General Huerta.

The three diplomats later announced no further steps would be taken by them until replies had been received from the leaders of the Mexican factions.

This announcement was made after a meeting of the three envoys—Domicio Da Gama of Brazil, Romulo S. Naon of Argentina and Eduardo F. Mujica of Chile.

MAY REPORT TO QUIBBLING.

Unquestionably, Huerta again will resort to quibbling over terms. He will make a condition of acceptance that the three powers do not treat with Carranza, Villa and Zapata.

He also may make as a condition the withdrawal by the United States of its forces in occupation of Vera Cruz.

Finally, he probably will insist on the formal recognition of his government by the United States.

All three of these conditions President Wilson will reject.

SOLDIERS LAND IN VERA CRUZ

Fifth Brigade Disembarks and General Funston Takes Supreme Command.

SAILORS ARE WITHDRAWN

American Marines Are to Continue Their Duties Ashore at Mexican City in Co-Operation With the Troops.

Vera Cruz, April 29.—The transports bringing the Fifth army brigade, comprising the Fourth, Seventh, Nineteenth and Twenty-eighth infantry regiments, under Brig. Gen. Frederick Funston, were made fast at the docks shortly before ten o'clock yesterday and the troops began at once to land. They are all now on Mexican soil.

General Funston and Capt. Harry McL. P. Huse, chief-of-staff of Rear Admiral Fletcher, were the first to go ashore. They conferred with Rear Admiral Fletcher before calling on Rear Admiral Badger, commander-in-chief of the Atlantic fleet.

Immediately upon the arrival of the transports Meade, Kilpatrick Sumner and McClellan in the harbor, the secretary of war at Washington was notified.

The bluejackets have been withdrawn, but the marines will continue their duties ashore in co-operation with the troops.

China Troops on Way.

The arrival of the soldiers was not marked by any ceremony. The few Mexican laborers working about the docks looked on at the fresh force without displaying any interest

In addition to the infantrymen who arrived today, Company E of the Signal corps, the Sixth cavalry regiment, the Fourth field artillery and the Third field ambulance company are daily expected here.

Seizure by Rear Admiral Fletcher of the steam yards and buildings of the Terminal company, a British-owned concern, control over which is regarded as necessary in order to facilitate the resumption of the normal commercial activity of the city has been officially approved.

Pushing War Preparations.

Washington, April 26.—Despite the continued efforts to find a peaceful solution for the Mexican trouble, preparations for real war are going forward, and plans are rapidly maturing not only for the reinforcing of General Funston's force at Vera Cruz, but for the landing of troops at other points on the coast, and the crossing of the northern border should it become necessary to deal with the constitutionalists under Carranza and Villa.

U. S. Consul General Jailed.

Anti-American feeling in Mexico City is believed to be near a crisis. Throughout the day reports after report reached this city of atrocities to United States citizens at Huerta's capital, of American men, women and children dragged from trains, of indignities to United States officials, and of riotous mobs in the streets demanding American blood and the destruction of American property.

As indicating the trend of the popular frenzy which is overrunning the republic Consul General Shanklin reported that he was in actual danger of his life before he finally succeeded in getting out of the Mexican capital to Vera Cruz on the train with Charge d'Ohsangbaussy. The consul general was one of the last victims of the military censors and was not permitted to communicate with Washington. In his report he said there were exciting moments in Mexico during the day preceding his departure. Following the overturning of the statue of Washington mobs began to march through the streets crying "Death to the Gringoes!"

United States Consul Philip C. Hanna at Monterey also reported to Secretary Bryan that he had been humiliated and placed in jail by Mexican federal officials on April 22, and left behind the bars until released two days later by the constitutionalists when they captured the city.

Army Well Supplied.

The administration has just been informed that Quartermaster General Aleshire has stripped his depots and properly distributed for the field equipment of 165,000 men over and above the combined forces of the regular and the national guard.

This means that we can throw an army of 300,000 men into the field today with the assurance that it will be properly equipped for six months' campaign. In the meantime, equipment will be made and properly distributed for the use of the same force in the future and for all additional forces which it may be necessary to raise.

It is this, now in the north of Mexico with an army estimated at 4,000 men makes one hostile movement, a division of the rangers will advance across the border.

Here is the plan which, it is expected, will be adopted the instant state troops become federal troops:

They will be sent to the border to take the places of the regular regiments which are ordered into hostile territory, and if the first army of invasion from the north or by way of Tampico or Vera Cruz is not judged to be strong enough for the initial service, guardsmen regiments will be added at once to the divisions of regulars and their war service will begin instantly.

One of the encouraging features of the situation was the apparent friendliness manifested toward the United States by General Villa, military leader of the constitutionalists, in an interview with American Consul Carothers at Juarez, and it was believed that his attitude might have considerable influence on General Carranza.

Demands of Carranza Rejected.

Washington, April 24.—President Wilson has rejected the demand of Gen. Venustiano Carranza, provisional president of the Mexican constitutionalists, that the American marines and sailors who captured Vera Cruz, evacuate that city. In a statement issued after a cabinet conference in reply to the message received from the constitutionalist chief, the president declared that "we are now dealing only with those whom Huerta commands and those who come to his support."

Carranza's request for the withdrawal of the American forces from Vera Cruz on the grounds that it "was a violation of the national sovereignty of Mexico" and a violation act to the Mexican nation gave the president and his cabinet advisers much food for thought, but no concern, much concern.

Germans to the Rescue.

Galveston, Tex., April 27.—The Tampico situation has confused to serious according to a wireless message reaching here, that two torpedo boats were sent up the Panuco river at Tampico to get Americans.

About midnight a mob of 600 persons began throwing stones at the Southern hotel, where there were twenty or thirty American women and 300 American men.

The mob began pounding on the doors with clubs. One Mexican fired through a window, but no one was wounded. Captain von Kohler of the German cruiser Dresden, the refugees said, sent officers ashore notifying the mob that unless they dispersed within fifteen minutes he would land marines.

German sailors then took the women from the Southern and the Imperial hotels aboard boats to ships in the harbor.

"(Signed) "V. HUERTA."

Villa May Desert Carranza.

El Paso, Tex., April 29.—That a crisis in the relations of General Villa and Carranza will be reached at Chihuahua immediately is indicated in a private letter received from that city, and by information in the possession of well informed officials here.

Harmony will be re-established, it is said, or a complete break will occur. Villa's determination to return to Chihuahua was taken suddenly on receipt of important dispatches from his aids in that city.

Warned Against Acts of Violence.

Washington, April 29.—American Consul Hostetter telegraphed the state department that Generals Obregon and Alvardo of the Mexican constitutionalists had warned the people of the state of Sonora that any demonstration against Americans and outlying spanches would likely lead to hanging.

European Diplomats Pessimistic.

Washington, April 29.—European diplomats in Washington are pessimistic over the successful outcome of mediation proposals by South American governments to prevent war with Mexico. While the action of Great Britain, Germany and France in urging Huerta to accept the good offices proffered by Brazil, Chile and Argentina has had an encouraging effect upon officials here, there are few who believe that success can follow the undertaking.

Such a photograph as this, of bluejackets swabbing out the 14-inch guns of an American dreadnaught after they have been fired, gives a vivid idea of the size of those monster rifles.

Philadelphia, April 28.—George F. Baer, president of the Philadelphia & Reading railway, died at his home here Sunday evening. He was stricken suddenly Saturday morning while walking to his office.

His career was a remarkable one. In turn he was printer's devil, reporter, editor, soldier, civil engineer and railroad president.

Mr. Baer was born September 26, 1842, in Somerset township, Somerset county, Pennsylvania, of German ancestry.

He worked on his father's farm and attended the common schools and later the high school in Somerset. He saved enough money to allow him to study at Franklin and Marshall college for a year and then with his brother's aid he obtained control of the newspaper for which he had worked.

That he was attached to the Union, however, he demonstrated soon after. When he raised a company, of which he was captain, and which became Company E of the One Hundred and Thirty-third Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry.

His first battle was the second Bull Run and he served later with distinction at Fredericksburg, Antietam, Chancellorsville and other fights. After Chancellorsville he was made adjutant general of the second brigade, Humphrey's division of the Second corps of the Army of the Potomac, becoming a major in his regiment the year.

After the war he read law in the office of one of his brothers and was admitted to the bar. He removed to Reading in 1868.

SPIES IN EVERY BORDER TOWN

Washington.—Step into the lobby of any hotel in any American town along the Mexican border from El Paso to the Gulf of California, and, if you are experienced, what do you see? Americans or Col. Hunter Messenger of Arizona, N. M., you can't mistake faces that tell you a good deal of faces of characters! men, sneaking, lounging and watching. Faces, in fact, of loiters, Mexican spies, federal spies, rebel spies.

For the spies infest the border hotels. News is furnished from their reports. Every one of shifting men has members a spy of one side or the other. Every one of benefits by the come of the guns unreported across the line in some camp.

Does the American gentleman remark he believes the constitutionalists are a "bunch of thieves?" Let him but say it aloud in the best of unguarded conversation, and he has given evidence of it. For his cattle suddenly become obscured of wandering or subject to a mysterious laying on of hands. And are no more seen on the hoof or his ranch. Organizing he himself is spirited away. Or let him curse Huerta in discussion. Then go south into the federal territory on business. Better for him had he been in the house of the constabulary. He is a rancher' near Arizona.

Histories of Dueling.

The article on the duel in the latest edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica is a clear statement of the history and practice of the single combat, written by Francis Storr, who has a reputation for his studies of several of the obscure themes of social order. The rules of the duel rest in the precedents of the practice, therefore the only way to become familiar with the practice and the reputation of the private resort to arms is to study the records of duelling. Perhaps the best work of reference for continental duels is the two volumes of Forgueron's de Chantagrelet, "Historie des Duels Anciens et Modernes," and for English readings on the head of honor yourself Bellamy's "Romance of Duelling."

Aged Should Eat Sparingly.

A British scientist has given a realistic of hygiene for the treatment of the aged. It is pointed out that the aged require less food of all kinds, because they utilize it more fully than do people in a normal adult's ration, overtaxes their digestive powers and floods the blood with effete products which the kidneys and other emunctories cannot handle. Immoderate meals should be succeeded, and baths, which should be taken regularly, should be neither too hot nor cold, of short duration, and preferably in the evening, when they conduce to a good night's sleep. Fresh air and exercise are indispensable. Clothing should be light, warm, loose and of woolen material. The feet should be well protected.

ECZEMA ON BACK AND CHEST

Pierson, N. Dakota.—"The eczema started on my scalp. It finally went on to the back of my neck, then on to my back, arms and chest. It broke out in pimples first and then seemed to run together in some places, making a sore about the size of a dime. At times the itching and burning were so intense that it seemed unbearable. The more I scratched it the worse it became, and there would be a slight discharge from it, especially on my scalp, so as to make my hair matted and sticky close to the scalp. The hair was dry, lifeless and thin. My hair was falling so terribly that I began to despair of ever finding relief. My clothes irritated the eruption on my back. The affected parts were almost a solid scab.

Housework Is a Burden

It's hard enough to keep house if in perfect health, but for a woman who is sick, tired and suffering from an aching back it's heavy labor indeed.

Any woman in this condition has good cause to complain of her burden. Only if the kidney action seems disordered, Doan's Kidney Pills have earned thousands of suffering women. It's the best recommendation. Ask a kidney sufferer.

ALGARA'S PASSPORTS RECALL DAYS OF '98

The passports which were presented to Senor Algara by the State department follow the customary formula, and, with the exception of the name, are similar to those handed 16 years ago to Senor Luis Polo y Fernabe, who was Spanish minister here at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war. The passports read:

"To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

"Know ye, that the bearer thereof, Senor J. Algara is an Charge d'affaires ad interim of Mexico to the United States, is about to travel abroad accompanied by his suite.

"These are therefore to request all officers of the United States, or any state thereof, whom it may concern, to permit the said Senor Algara to pass freely, without let or molestation, and to extend to them friendly aid and protection in case of need.

BAD YOUTH IN THE TOILS

Youthful Robber Has Remarkable Career Between Mercy and Justice

Young Franklin, in jail here on the charge of robbing a relative at East Jordan who had befriended him, turns out to be a well mannered crook.

Up to last week, when the truth concerning him was gleaned from the rolled records of various points, the police thought seriously of extending clemency by a parole. Now he goes back to Detroit where he will have to answer to a more serious charge than that for which he is booked in this county.

Franklin was in the south operating with a pal, and was kicked off a train at Chattanooga by a brakeman. From there he beat his way to Detroit, where, in company with another crook, he appropriated an automobile. He was arrested by deputy sheriff Delaurier. The officer, in the goodness of his heart, took an interest in the boy and through his efforts a parole was granted. Delaurier took him home, clothed him and boarded him for six weeks. Then Franklin disappeared, and with him went a purse containing $50.

Then Franklin, with two pals, broke into the Globe Furnishing Co's store in Detroit and stole goods to the value of $1,000. From there he worked his way north, the East Jordan escapade following.

Concerning the Offices

Matters political, concerning Charlevoix county, are just now interesting to those interested.

There are more candidates for Sheriff in Charlevoix county than there are for Congress in the ---teenth district—we have forgotten the number since Lilaquist was eliminated. That undistinguished statesman is thrown up against Mr. Cushman. We have figured it out, and it would take just 10,000 Lilaquists to make one Forsley.

As to the Senate—If there is a man in the district who deserves it, Mac Harris, of Boyne City, should go to Lansing as a member of the Michigan "house of peers." J. M. Harris is made of the stuff that stands the wear and never fades on exposition to the light.

Why should not McMillan go back to the Michigan house of commons? A man just learns how to conduct himself in the clock room the first term, and Mac came home from Lansing with no discredit marks that we know of.

But returning to premier near home:—there are about as many candidates for Sheriff as there are townships and wards in the county, and that too many. It is positively confusing, and we shall let them fight it out to the primaries.

Beyond the shrivelty there is a foggy bank, and we shall have it; wait and see.

The Man Without Pity

During the campaign in which Lindquist was elected to congress he announced in his private letters to the voters that he was not for sale up to any party.

And now he has the nerve to come up against Fordney in the re-arranged district—the pigmy and the giant. Lindquist has been as near a nonentity as congress as till recently was Mann in the Michigan senate, but, with the same content, he also has ambition.

The man outside party has our sympathy. We have an honest respect for Fred Lindquist (Lorenzo Cobb, and Herschel Miller, for instance; but for a half-breed or a mugwump—Ouch!

NEW ERA FOR P. M. RAILWAY

W. A. Garrett, New General Manager, —His Aspirations and Purposes.

The new general manager of the Pere Marquette, Mr. W. A. Garrett, accompanied by Mr. Patrianche, a veteran officer of the road, arrived in Charlevoix Saturday, remaining over Sunday.

Mr. Garrett starts out with the fixed purpose of building up the Pere Marquette system. He comes to the system as general manager, and he comes with the conviction that the public holds the key to the vaults in which is locked the secret of the Pere Marquette problem. He comes as an educator, because he believes that the public has been laboring under a misapprehension of cause and effect with reference to Pere Marquette conditions.

He comes with the hope that a greater degree of confidence may be established between himself and the public in the work he has undertaken. Not only this, but he comes with the avowed purpose of taking into his confidence the more than ten thousand employes of the company.

But, first of all, he desires to get into intimate touch with the public to the end that the two forces may work more in harmony for the results desired. He comes to the work fully cognizant of the desperate financial condition into which the system has drifted, and from the jungle of public distrust and destructive criticism he hopes to guide it into the broad sunlight of prosperity. It is a herculean task, but we believe he will win out.

In the knowledge of railroad details Mr. Garrett is a past high priest after the order of Milwaukee hoosier city name: a storage battery of executive force and relation energy. In consequence, Alsig, he is the Theodore Roosevelt of the railroad world. One cannot sit in his presence an hour without being impressed by his forceful character and intense honesty of purpose. He knows what the matter is, and he is not at a loss to find a remedy.

The Pere Marquette system has in Michigan a greater mileage than any other road in the state—1200 miles. It gives service to sections of the state that are non-productive of profit, and a drain upon the increment from more advanced sections of territory on its lines. This situation is self-explanatory. A popular misunderstanding of conditions, and a voluntarism round of foolish legislation have combined to burden the system, and block the wheels of progress.

Mr. Garrett is a booster from Boonville, and he wants every business man and every farmer on the line to join his booster club; and it is a matter of mutual concern, for with increased transportation facilities involving a greater degree of "certainty, celerity, and security," there will accrue to the public the first and greatest benefit.

"Safety first," is Mr. Garrett's watchword, then "service." He is impressing it upon the mind of every employe that the Pere Marquette cold, if failure will be strictly avoided.

Mr. Garret was enthusiastic in his expressions of admiration for Charlevoix, and asked our scribe to assure the citizens that their transportation interests would have his personal attention, and that he is now exercising his best thought and effort toward giving them a summer passenger service that will meet their most sanguine hopes.

To make greater the new efficiency of the Pere Marquette system a new book of rules has been adopted for the operating department which went into effect May 1 over all the lines of the road. It includes many changes from the old manual system. The new rules have been accepted by the rank and file in the spirit that shows that they stand for progress in preference to rules.

Notwithstanding the radical change in rules, the change was offered May 1, after three weeks instruction at trainmen and yardmen without any confusion whatever. The trainmen easily grasp the adoption of the standard color signals which are now in effect on the main line from Chicago to Detroit, and which will be in effect on all lines and branches, as promptly as may be with good practice.

Localizing these observations, we are constrained to observe, somewhat, that the company is particularly fortunate in its selection of Mr. Gonser's successor as agent. Mr. Alexander was formerly identified with Canadian railroad work, but comes here from Iowa, where he served as the road's freight agent for several years with an ability and loyalty that won for him a concerted support from both the company and the public. It only requires one brief interview with Mr. Alexander to reveal the fact that he is a railroad man with railroad brains, and a gentleman possessing quantities of ability and sociability that are valuable railroad assets.

East Jordan Enterprise: East Jordan is becoming a Mecca for the summer homes of members of the theatrical profession. Since Mr. John R. Philips and Mr. Julie Walters bought and fitted up summer homes here others have been coming thereon, and they are still coming—the latest being Mr. and Mrs. John T. Carlisle, of the Hewes and Beer company, who this week have purchased the John Miles place, east of the city. They are arranging to spend over a thousand dollars in fitting this place up. They go to Grand Rapids Monday for a two weeks engagement in stock this season and then come here for the summer.

On Friday the two city teams played here, marking up another victory for Charlevoix 21 to 2.

Frank E. Chase, department commander, G. A. R., accompanied by his wife, paid Charlevoix a brief visit Monday, coming down from Boyne City. He proceeded to East Jordan, Commander Chase is on a tour of the State making official visits to the G. A. R. posts, which, by the way, are greeted by our small colony of old veterans.

The potato warehouse of Charles Jefferies at Traverse City was destroyed by fire Wednesday. It is supposed that the fire originated from a spark from a passing locomotive. A heavy north wind blew sparks across the Boardman River setting fire to several buildings not little distant. Some 300 barrels and bushels of potatoes were destroyed. The loss is estimated at $5,000 partially insured. The building was formerly used as a home factory and was one of the old landmarks having been built fifty years ago.

There is a great significance in the statement recently made by the officials of the Pere Marquette railroad to the effect that during the months of March and April that same road brought into Michigan a greater number—This showing is an indication that the advertising that has been done in behalf of this section of the state is now bringing the results that were predicted a long time ago by the workers along development lines.

A visitor to Charlevoix who awakens interest among old-timers is Chas. C. Marshall, son of the late E. B. Marshall, a pioneer of Hawks, Antrim county. Mr. Marshall, who is a government forest ranger, had lives at Libby, Montana. Recently he was recognized by the Carnegie Hero Fund, with a medal and one thousand dollars for heroic conduct in saving a person from drowning. Mr. Marshall is accompanied by his wife and sister, and they are the guests of their cousins, the "Wilkinson boys." The sister, Mrs. Gilmore, however, resides at Old Mission, Mich.

A fire alarm called out the department Friday morning. The roof of the coal shed of the Coal and Wood Co., on Pine Lake caught fire from a passing locomotive, but it was extinguished before the fire lads arrived.

A large delegation of Charlevoix members went on an excursion to Boyne City Wednesday of this week, to attend the county rally of the L. O. T. M. M. Lady Hotts, an offshoot of the Great Hive was present.

The steamer City of Boyne will give an excursion to Petoskey, Saturday, May 23, to the northern Michigan Track Meet. The boat will leave Wilson's dock at 8:30 a. m., returning, leave Petoskey at 6:00 p. m. Fare round trip 50c.

Jack Champion and Grace Richmond and their players will begin a week's engagement at the Majestic next Monday night, opening with "Retribution," a story of New York life, and following every night with tabloid versions of other famous plays. This company is well and favorably known here.

Samuel Bailey, of Cincinnati, and a leading member of the Charlevoix Summer Home Association, is here with his family for the balance of the season. Another of the Belvedere colony to arrive is Mr. J. J. Dissette of Indianapolis, who is here for a few days last week as a preparatory visit.

Georgs Hughes came down the street from the north side Monday morning looking as clean and smiling and vigorous, announcing that it was his 90th birthday, and that he expects to go fishing again the summer season. Georgs is one of the earliest of the early settlers of this section. He still makes his home with his son and Mrs. H. C. Cooper. There is no reasonable doubt that he will reach the one hundred year mark.

Petoskey News: A remarkable pitching duel was witnessed in the game of baseball Saturday afternoon at Charlevoix when the Petoskey and Charlevoix high school teams met before a fine large crowd. Reed, for Petoskey, pitched one of the most remarkable games of high school baseball ever witnessed in northern Michigan, holding Charlevoix to one hit, striking out thirteen men and allowing but one base on balls. He also secured three of his team's five hits, his terrific double in the ninth inning bringing Sik home from first with Petoskey's only tally. Despite this phenomenal pitching Petoskey was forced to accept defeat, seven errors allowing three runs to be scored. Sec. of Charlevoix, pitched just as remarkable ball, holding Petoskey to five hits, striking out fourteen men and allowing but two to walk. Reed and Smith being the only men who could beate his curves. He retired the side on strikes in the first, third and fifth innings and only thirty men faced him in the entire game. Errors by Smith, Sik, Hieshman and Dean gave Charlevoix their runs. Energy of Charlevoix umpired the game. Next Friday the Petoskey team will play Boyne City at Petoskey.

Death of Mrs. Mary Kelly

Mrs. Mary Kelly, relict of the late Thomas Kelly, died at her veteran home at the Soldiers' Home, in Grand Rapids, last Friday, aged 6 years. She was in good health up to within a week of her death. Deceased came to Charlevoix with her husband fifty-one years ago. She was the mother of John Kelly and Mrs. M. Laughlin, of this city.

The remains arrived here Saturday the funeral occuring from the Lutheran house Sunday afternoon, Rev. Quinton Walker officiating. Interment in the G. A. R. section of Brookside Cemetery.

RESORT ROBBER APPREHENDED

Stolen Effects From a Belvedere Cottage Found and Arrest Made

The cottage of J. L. Dissette, on the Belvedere grounds, was entered some time during the past winter, and household effects, consisting of curtains, rugs, china and glassware, taken therefrom. The matter was kept quiet, for obvious reasons.

But last week Mr. Dissette came up from his home in Indianapolis, and steps were taken to locate the goods and apprehend the robber. Owing to the fact that Jack Cunningham had been known to have accumulated other people's property in the past, suspicion was centered on his house.

A search warrant was taken out Tuesday, and most of the property found in the Cunningham house and identified by Mr. Dissette. A warrant was immediately issued for Cunningham. He cannot explain his possession of the goods, which have a value of from $150 to $200.

GUARD MOVIES COMING HERE

Official Moving Pictures of Michigan National Guards to be Here June 18th

Major Michael J. Phillips, of Owosso, inspector of Rifle Practice, Michigan National Guard, will be in Charlevoix the night of June 18th with the official films of the Michigan National Guard. At the annual encampment of the Guard at Ludington in August, 1912, Governor Osborn conceived the idea that branch of the people could not all go to the camp, it would be a good thing for the camp to go to them, with the two-fold purpose of educating the people concerning the State forces, and to stimulate an interest in State military affairs.

Thereupon he caused the detail of Major Philips for this duty. The films were made under Major Phillips' personal supervision, and they embraced all the many phases of military duty—the manoeuvers, skirmish drill, review, camp life, etc. The State owns these films, and they are being used for the purpose specified. Major Phillips "delivers" the pictures.

Major Phillips is one of the most distinguished officers of the brigade. He is considered to be one of the best authorities on target practice in the country. He was due to retire last January, but in view of his experience and standing in that work he was induced to remain in the service. He is a talented writer on military subjects, and has an enviable reputation as written on other subjects.

June 18th is the date fixed.

KILLED BY AN EXPLOSION

A Well Known Charlevoix Citizen Killed in Detroit

Will W. Niles, of Walloon Lake, was among those killed Friday afternoon in the explosion of an acid tank at the Michigan Crude Rubber company works at Detroit. Carl and Murray Goodwin, also of Walloon Lake, and employed at the plant, escaped injury by a second time to advices from that city, left there Saturday afternoon with the remains.

Mr. Niles was in Petoskey last Saturday, having come from Detroit to arrange for the removal of his family to that city, having just been given the position of mill-wright at the plant at a salary of $1,000 a year with a month's vacation each year. He had lived during most of his life at Walloon Lake, where he had a fine home. He was a carpenter and mill-wright and worked in Petoskey during the past winter.

Deceased was for three years supervisor of Melrose township, succeeding E. A. Correll, now Judge of Probate. He was a son of the late W. C. Niles, a pioneer of the eastern part of this county, and for many years a supervisor.

Mrs. W. C. Niles, mother of the deceased, has been in critical condition and it is feared that the shock may prove fatal to her.

This is Rich

Col. Theodore Roosevelt, the renowned American traveler and discoverer, has been heard from concerning his possible candidacy for president as a republican.

"Never says sir!"

He says he will not affiliate himself with the "republican honors."

Very rich!

Will Banquet at Charlevoix

Amount get together! republican event will be pulled off June 4th—this date at the Elston Hotel, Charlevoix. Arrangements are already being made, and it is the intention of those having the matter in charge to make it a roaring success.

A NOTABLE GATHERING

Boyne City Meeting of Republicans Indicated a Solid Front

It was a swarming of Stalwarts, an answer to the huzza call of "hoots and toodles"—that meeting of republicans at Boyne City last Friday night.

It has been referred to as a "get together" meeting. It was not. It was a promulgation of the fact that the republicans of Charlevoix county are together. There may have been a few former blackeyes from the true faith into political agnosticism, but they were born as republicans, and there were no questions asked.

Every word uttered had the ring of secession, and there was no mistaking the temper of the businessmen in the enthusiasm that greeted the most pronounced statements. Candidates for office were there, of course, but references to county, legislative or congressional politics were barred. There was not a discordant note sounded. "Mac" Harris, Judge Mayne, Judge Dyell (a guest from Emmet county,) Lisle Shanahan, and a score of others, including the youthful president of the Boyne City Young Men's Republican Club, Mr. Baker, gave impulse and vigor to warm hearts, and stirred stagnant republican blood into active, throbbing circulation.

The event was not the plowing up of weed infested soil, but the harrowing of fallow land, which has never yet missed yielding a lucrative crop in compensation for shortages in other fields where the hedges and barbed wire fences have been broken through.

The meeting forcefully demonstrated the fact that the republican party in Charlevoix county is not moribund. The banner at the Wolverine Hotel was the warp into which was woven the web of eloquent and earnest pledges of loyal adherence to republican principles.

W. H. Griffin, of the Boyne Journal, was elected president of the Charlevoix county republican club, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of J. L. Converse.

THE NEW CHARLEVOIX

The Bedfords, of this City, Open This Grand Rapids Hotel

The new Charlevoix, formerly the Clarendon, Monroe avenue and Bridge street says the Grand Rapids Herald, will be opened to the public next Tuesday, May 19. The hotel has been completely overhauled from basement to top of the chimney. In every sense of the word the hotel presents a new appearance. Mrs. Bertie Bedford is proprietor. Her son H. Bedford will assist her in the management and C. Cole, for seven years chief at the Union depot, will be steward.

The rooms down stairs, the lobby, a writing room, cafeteria and a private dining room are finished in oaks style, hand effect, with the walls finished in Tiffany colors. Brown leather furniture is fittingly used. There are 75 sleeping rooms, new throughout and with the club representatives more than 2,000 republicans will assemble as delegates. Others, who come as spectators and listeners, will be welcomed, the general invitation of the state central committee being extended to fall members of the party and those desiring to affiliate with it.

The conference will open at 11 a. m. Tuesday, May 26th, with a "key-note address" by Congressman Gerhardt Patrick H. Kelley, of Lansing, and will recess until 2 p. m. after the morning session to hear Congressman Lafayette United States Senator William Alden Smith will preside in the afternoon as permanent chairman, and introduce Senator Borah and various speakers from other states and from the state. The latter will deliver a series of five minute talks.

Herewith is the list of those who will attend from Charlevoix: W. J. Raghow, R. V. Paddock, R. C. Hammel, D. D. Hammond, Chef Moelhman, S. A. Correll and W. J. Gallagher.

RETURN OF FAVORITE PLAYERS

Champion—Richmond Players at The Majestic Theatre Next Week

Manager Miles announces the annual engagement of Jack Champion—Grace Richmond and their players who will open a week's engagement at the Majestic Theatre, Monday night, the 25th.

This is the third spring that this company has visited our city and are popular favorites with the people of Charlevoix.

The opening play "Honest Hearts" is one of the old favorite plays of this company and was presented here during their first engagement here three years ago. The play tells a story of intense, dramatic interest and has a comedy vein throughout that is sure to please.

During the week a number of new plays that have never before been seen in Charlevoix will be presented. Full repertoire for the week will be found in the display ad in this issue.

GREAT POLITICAL GATHERING

The Republican Welfare Conference in Detroit May 26th

Michigan republicans win gather in Detroit May 26th, and the meeting promises to be one of the greatest political conferences in the history of the State.

One delegate has been allotted for every 1,000 population in each county and this means a total of 2,315 men from the eighty-three counties of the state. In addition, each of the fifty-odd clubs in the State League of Republican clubs has been requested by President Will A. Watts to send ten delegates.

The letters from county chairmen indicate that nearly, if not all, the anticipated delegates will be there, and with the club representatives more than 2,000 republicans will assemble as delegates. Others, who come as spectators and listeners, will be welcomed, the general invitation of the state central committee being extended to fall members of the party and those desiring to affiliate with it.

The conference will open at 11 a. m. Tuesday, May 26th, with a "key-note address" by Congressman Gerhardt Patrick H. Kelley, of Lansing, and will recess until 2 p. m. after the morning session to hear Congressman Lafayette United States Senator William Alden Smith will preside in the afternoon as permanent chairman, and introduce Senator Borah and various speakers from other states and from the state. The latter will deliver a series of five minute talks.

Herewith is the list of those who will attend from Charlevoix: W. J. Raghow, R. V. Paddock, R. C. Hammel, D. D. Hammond, Chef Moelhman, S. A. Correll and W. J. Gallagher.

GOOD ROADS BEE DAYS

Governor Asks United Effort to Improve Highways

By proclamation June 4th and 5th have been designated as "good roads days," in which every able bodied man is asked to lay aside their usual avocations and help fill up the holes in the highways.

The improvement that may be accomplished by united effort is incalculable. A little work done by everybody, will do the expected of hundreds of men, if all. Turn out on those days and do something.

Death of W. L. Stiger

Just as we go to press we learn that W. L. Stiger, formerly of Charlevoix, died Tuesday night at the Michigan Insane Home, Alma.

Mr. Stiger is one of the oldest of the pioneer settlers of this section. He was a member of Charlevoix Lodge.

The Mexican Situation

Mediation is progressing on Canadian soil, and the conferees will soon discover the Washington policy.

Child Cross! Feverish! Sick! Is your stomach sour, tongue coated, breath fetid? Is your child cross, restless, irritable? Has it stomachache, constipation, diarrhea, grinds teeth while asleep, and starts up with terrified screams? Give Kickapoo Worm Killer—something that expels the worms, and almost every child has them. Kickapoo Worm Killer is a remarkable medicine. Get a box today, start at once. You won't have to coax, as Kickapoo Worm Killer is a candy confection. Expels the worms, the cause of the child's trouble. Sold by druggists. Recommended by F. G. Hines & Co.

BETTER POTATOES

The Crop Should be Improved in Michigan With Proper Attention

Although Michigan ranked first among the states of the union last year in the value of potatoes, the crop of even higher yield per acre, as well as of better quality, could easily be grown in this state if farmers would adopt more closely the methods of growing recommended by the Michigan Agricultural College. In the opinion of F. A. Sprague, research assistant in farm crops at the college, in an interview with the Lansing Republican, that there are being made to obtain a bigger and better crop.

"According to estimates made by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Michigan ranked first among the states in the production of potatoes last season," Sprague declared.

He has been elected president of the Michigan Potato Growers' Association, with headquarters at the Agricultural college has been organized for the purpose of advancing the potato industry. Several of the states in which large areas of potatoes are grown have active organizations, and if Michigan is going to keep its place in the procession, she must not lag in this respect. The advancement of the potato industry in Michigan is a matter which concerns every person in the state and many in other regions who depend upon as for seed and supplies. C. W. Wass, state representative in horticulture, for the college is rapidly putting in touch with the potato growers, and an association of the new association, expects to accomplish much during the first season. We can suggest no better slogan than "Better Potatoes for Michigan."

FUNSTON EAGER TO ADVANCE ON CITY OF MEXICO

Railroad From Vera Cruz to Capital Is Mined by Huerta's Soldiers.

ENVOYS TO MEET IN CANADA

Funston Strengthens Outposts and Navy Prepares to Assist in Case of Attack—Zapata Threatens Huerta—Constitutionalists Out of Peace Parley.

Washington, May 6.—If we is learned on good authority that both Rear Admiral Badger and General Funston are urging by repeated cable messages an advance by the United States troops on Mexico City. Admiral Badger has informed Secretary of the Navy Daniels that delay in ordering this advance will cost many thousands of American lives. General Funston has urged the immediate dispatch of 10,000 more troops so he can begin the march. The railroad from Vera Cruz to Mexico City has been mined by the Mexicans.

Mexican Troops to Meet Mexicans.

Vera Cruz, May 6.—All the American outposts were strengthened by Brig. Gen. Frederick Funston because of the increase in numbers of the Mexican federals who are lying west and northwest of this city. Rear Admiral Badger was also asked to hold sailors in readiness for further operations inland.

The United States troops stationed on the outer lines report roving bands of Mexicans almost daily and it is supposed that these are scouting and forming parties sent out by Gen. Gustave Maass. Although the Mexicans are short of food, the frugal habits of the average Mexican makes a big food supply unnecessary.

General Funston is cooperating with United States Consul W. W. Canada, the members of the military governor's cabinet and Rear Admirals Fletcher and Badger in working out the details for the rehabilitation of the country. [illegible]

Urge Advance on Mexico City.

Washington, May 6.—Force felt by the officials of the navy department over the situation at Tampico were set at rest when Secretary of the Navy Daniels received a confidential dispatch from Rear Admiral Mayo stating that the American bluejackets and marines there could capture Tampico within three hours.

Rear Admiral Badger has informed Secretary Daniels that delay at Vera Cruz in pushing the American outposts to Mexico City will cost thousands of American lives. Meanwhile General Funston has reported that General Maas, the Mexican Federal commander, has mined the railroad for several miles out of Vera Cruz and has built a series of barbed wire obstructions and thrown up breastworks.

From the authoritative source it was learned that the naval commanders, as well as General Funston, are urging that an advance be made on Mexico City at the earliest possible time.

Sufficient forces are not now in Mexico, according to Funston, to make an advance. The war department, however, it was ascertained, can start 10,000 men for Mexico within ten hours.

Mediators to Meet in Canada.

Secretary Bryan announced that Niagara Falls, Canada, has been chosen as the city where the mediation conferences will be held and that the conferences will begin May 20.

Peace Envoys Not Named.

The Latin-American mediators' efforts to bring about peace in Mexico have failed to accomplish their end, although hope of securing a cessation of hostilities in the southern republic and the establishment of a firm government founded on a legal election.

Whether they will accomplish their secondary aim—a settlement of the issues between Huerta and the United States—is problematical. Though Huerta has appointed his envoys to place his cause before the mediators, the United States has not done so, and there was no indication that it would act immediately.

Carranza Is Eliminated.

General Carranza and his constitutionalists were eliminated from all negotiations for the present by the mediators. The envoys went into session with the determination also to postpone until later consideration of the present issues between Huerta and the Washington government.

Mediators disappointed in the situation have sided, diplomats here generally believe, the chance of solving the Latin-American problem at this time, the mediators thereby have told Washington, they will save thousands of lives by not forcing a war at this time. Secretary Bryan is said to be decided to enter into an armistice with the Huerta forces. Suggestions that Carranza might change his attitude after he takes Saltillo brought no comment from constitutionalist representatives here.

Zapatistas Threaten Capital.

Vera Cruz, May 6.—Huerta will be driven out before the United States reaches the capital if Emilio Zapata, revolutionary leader of Southern Mexico, makes good a proclamation issued on May 1. The document reads:

"As a result of the army of Southern Mexico has decreed to take Mexico City by force and the conditions of the property of supporters of the federal army are in consequence with trial all chiefs and officials of the federal army for upholding the usurper Huerta. Signed Emiliano Zapata, War Manifesto publicly, and judging from the reality of what the nation's blood. We shall respect the lives and property of neutral foreigners and will allow five days for all inhabitants to leave Mexico City."

Appoints Peace Agents.

Washington, May 5.—General Huerta has informed the mediators that Francisco Carbajal, a Mexican jurist, and Augustine Garza Galindo, undersecretary of finance, have been selected as delegates to confer with the mediators, and that a third name will be submitted soon.

Is Huerta's Power Waning.

The tenor of the change on the situation is decidedly City. Every dispatch which comes from the place is considered. The administration has heard that Huerta's will finally has been conquered, but it is heard also that he is as determined as ever and that he has no intention of leaving Mexico City.

Vera Cruz Fight Feared.

Every effort is being made by the Washington officials to get from Mexico City the true story of conditions. Vera Cruz is fearful of the rumor of Huerta's impending downfall. It is known that, as a last act, he shall order the willing Maas to attack the forces of Funston at Vera Cruz and thus get in one last vengeful blow at the northern invaders.

There is reason to take the view of those students of the situation, who believe that the administration is not at all distressed because Carranza and Villa are insistent on their right to continue their fight against the federals and their campaign against the capital.

Battleship New York Arrives.

Vera Cruz, May 6.—At daylight Monday the New York, the world's largest superdreadnaught, arrived and anchored with the American fleet. Her sister battleship, the Texas, is on the way.

Although Mexico City newspapers assert there are 17,000 federal troops within a short distance of Vera Cruz, American naval scouts report there are not 500 armed Mexicans within fifteen miles of the city. However, the outposts are on the alert and members of the marine signal corps are posted on city roofs and towers to keep a sharp lookout and rush reinforcements to any threatened quarter.

Carranza Refuses Armistice.

Washington, May 4.—Carranza has refused to agree on an armistice with Huerta pending the mediation proceedings. This shatters the hope of the A.-B.-C. mediators for the pacification of Mexico without further recourse to arms.

As the situation now stands, despite the prolonged discussions of the A.-B.-C. envoys, the mediators will have only to do with the differences between the United States and Huerta. Succinctly expressed, the differences are these:

The refusal of Huerta to salute the American flag in atonement for the Tampico incident.

Carranza has agreed to the establishment of a neutral zone at the Tampico oil fields, but refused to agree to an armistice which would preclude further attempts to wrest Tampico from the federals.

The march of Villa on Saltillo, Tampico and his advance south of Mexico City will proceed without regard to the mediation plans. It appears that there may be a temporary truce at Tampico while the arrangements for neutral zone at the oil fields are being made.

U. S. Troops Fired on by Federals.

Vera Cruz, May 4.—Shots were exchanged between a force of Mexicans and the American outposts at the waterworks at El Tejar, nine miles from this city.

The Mexicans threatened to attack immediately unless the Americans surrendered their position at the water plant in ten minutes," but no general attack was made when the American troops failed to retire. Probably a half dozen shots were fired.

Huerta Ready to Quit.

Vera Cruz, May 4.—Persistent reports continue to circulate here that General Huerta intends to retire from the provisional presidency of Mexico City. [illegible]

WHAT MEXICANS HAVE FOUGHT FOR

Agrarian Democracy Has Been the Aim of the Peon Class for Past Century.

STRUGGLE STILL GOING ON

Position of Revolutionists and Constitution of 1857 for Which They Stand, Set Forth in Book by Senor de Lara.

In the confusion and lack of exact knowledge that attend the embroglio [illegible] the issue that has moved the Mexican people to revolt against Huerta has been lost sight of or is not known to most Americans.

What the people of Mexico have fought for from the first war of independence, and what they are fighting for now under Carranza and Villa is the right to buy and till farms. For a hundred years the peon class has waged a continuous struggle to achieve agrarian democracy. Time after time the revolution has been carried to the verge of success, and time after time the Mexican ruling class has invoked foreign intervention in order to prolong its power.

All this and a great deal more is made clear in a book just published by Doubleday, Page & Co. "The Mexican People: Their Struggle for Freedom," by L. Gutierres de Lara and Edgcumb Pinchon. It is frankly a statement of the position of the revolutionists, and shows why they believe American intervention in Mexico at the present time would only bring about more loss of life and worse conditions in the long run.

Senor de Lara has much to say about the constitution of 1857, that has been ruthlessly set aside by successive governments, and he gives a digest of that instrument, the binding of which follows:

Article 1. The Mexican people recognize that the rights of men are the foundation and the purpose of social institutions. In consequence they proclaim that all the laws and authorities of the country must respect and sustain the guarantees stipulated by this constitution.

Article II. In the republic every one is born free. The slaves who step into the national territory recover their freedom by this mere fact, and have the right of the protection of the law.

Article III. All education is free. The law will determine which professions needs a diploma for its exercise, and what requisites are to be fulfilled.

This fundamental principle was later amplified to make education universal, free, non-sectarian and compulsory.

Article IV. Every man is free to adopt the profession, trade, or work that suits him, it being useful and honest, and to enjoy the product thereof.

Article V. No man shall be compelled to work without his plain consent and without just compensation. The state will not permit to become effective any contract, pact or agreement with the purpose of the curtailment, the loss or the irrevocable sacrifice of the liberty of any man, may the cause be for personal labor, education, or religious vows. The law in consequence does not recognize monastic orders, and will not permit their establishment, no matter what may be the denomination or purpose for which they pretend to be established. Neither will be permitted a contract, or agreement by which a man makes a pact for his proscription or exile.

Article VI. The expression of ideas shall not be subjected to any judicial or governmental prosecution except in cases of attack upon the public morality, the rights of a third party, or the prevention of a crime or a disturbance of public order.

Article VII. The liberty of writing and publishing writings upon any matter is irrevocable. No previous censorship nor imposition of bonds upon the writers nor the publishers for the purpose of curtailing the freedom of the press can be established by any law or authority, such freedom being restricted to respect of private life, morals and public business.

Article IX. This gives the right of assembly.

Article X. This establishes the right of every [illegible] to possess arms for his safety and legitimate defense.

Article XI. This deals with immigration to the country and other travelling both from the country and into the same.

Article XII. This establishes the inviolability of all titles of nobility, prerogatives and hereditary honors.

Article XIII. In the Mexican Republic no one shall be subjected to private laws nor special courts. No man or corporation shall have fueros, or receive emoluments unless they be a compensation for public services and already fixed by law.

Article XIV. This establishes the principle that no one shall be tried by retroactive laws.

Article XV. No treaties can be made for the extradition of political offenders; neither for those criminals whose crime was committed in a country where they had their abode, nor can a treaty or agreement be made by which the warranties of rights that this constitution gives to man or citizen be altered.

Article XVI. This article establishes the principle that the family and domicile are inviolable, except for the purpose of arrest under a warrant from a proper court expressing the charge.

Article XVII. No one shall be arrested or imprisoned for debts of a purely civil character. No one shall exercise violence to claim his rights. The courts will always be ready for the administration of justice. This will be free, the costs being abolished.

Article XXVII. Private property shall not be taken without the consent of the owner, except in case of public utility, and by just payment therefor. Religious corporations or institutions, no matter of what denomination, character, durability or purpose, and civil corporations when under the influence, direction or superintendency of religious institutions, or ministers of any cult, shall not have the legal capacity to acquire or manage any real estate except the buildings which are used immediately and directly for the services of the said institutions. Neither will the law recognize any mortgage on any property held by these institutions.

Article XXVIII. State and church are independent. Congress cannot make any law establishing or forbidding any religion.

The practical abrogation of the constitution under Diaz and Huerta has resulted in the building up of a privileged class and the cruel exploitation of the people. Vast territories have passed into private ownership. The disinherited peon has become the virtual slave of the land owners, and Mexico has been a privilege purchased from the government by those who had the means.

These are the conditions that De Lara pictures and it is to end them the present fight of the constitutionalists is waging.

FORCED TO BUY PROTECTION

Refugees Arriving at Vera Cruz Tell of Paying Money to Huerta's Soldiers.

Vera Cruz—Sixty-three members of the Medina colony in the state of Oaxaca are among the refugees who have arrived here. They were held two days in Cordoba and report they were well treated, except that they were obliged to sleep on the floors of the barracks. They were relieved of guns, but not of the scanty belongings with their were able to bring with them.

J. W. Elliott, a locomotive engineer, was in Tierra Blanco when news of the occupation of Vera Cruz reached him. With his wife and children he started for Cordoba under guard of Mexican soldiers. At Cordoba the guards said they were hungry and demanded 50 pesos on the threat to separate Elliott and his family to a howling mob which surrounded the station and filled the streets.

The money was paid and Elliott and his family were marched more than a mile through the streets to the barracks, hounded all the way by the mobs. They were kept in the barracks six days, during the first two of which crowds surrounded the place demanding their lives. On two occasions members of the mob forced their way into the barracks and except for the efforts of the colonel and two other officers Elliott and his family would undoubtedly have been killed. Toward the end of their stay the demonstrations ceased to a large extent.

Manager Boyd of the Montenongo Hacienda, when he arrived at Cordoba, was forced by the federal guards to pay 1,050 pesos for protection through the streets to the jail.

Circulars containing the words "Kill the Gringoes" and urging the people to rise and massacre the prisoners were posted about Cordoba.

American Held as Spy is Freed.

Vera Cruz, May 2.—Authoritative information has been received from the federal government in Mexico City that Edward W. Ryan, who had been arrested as a spy at Zacatecas, and who it was reported had been condemned to death, has been released. Doctor Ryan, it is officially announced, is on his way to Mexico City. President Huerta has caused to be issued a safe passage to Vera Cruz.

Rebels Refuse Truce With Federals.

Chihuahua, Mex., May 5.—General Carranza will not permit his troops in front of Tampico to make a truce of any sort with the federal garrison demanding the support to reply to a message from Gen. Luis Caballero, commander of the constitutionalist forces at Tampico, asking for advice on the truce asked by the federal commander in the city, Carranza said:

"Do not enter into any truce under any circumstances."

General Caballero did not ask for what reason the federals desired an armistice. He reported to Carranza that the constitutionalist forces have taken possession of the waterworks outside of Tampico and that the water supply of the town is completely cut off.

Villa Won't Fight U. S.

Torreon, Mex., May 6.—The answer of Gen. Francisco Villa to a request from General Maas, in command of the Saltillo federal garrison, that Villa join the federals in avenging the American occupation of Vera Cruz, was delivered to the federal messengers. Villa refused to ally himself or his men with the federals and declared that the Huertaites had provoked foreign intervention for their own ends. General Maas' letter to Villa announced that in addition to occupying Vera Cruz the port of Salina Cruz had been seized by the United States forces April 28.

FACTS ABOUT MEXICO CITY.

It is the most populated school, and many thousands of Indians and half breeds living in crowded quarters, the death rate has been notoriously high—44 to 45 per 1,000, though drainage works, underground sewers, and waterworks have helped to improve these conditions.

The Paseo de la Reforma, the finest avenue in the city, is a broad boulevard almost three miles long.

There were (1908) 352 government schools in the city, including 13 professional and technical schools, and nearly 300 private schools; a geographical society, a geological society, an association of engineers and architects, and a society of natural history; also a national library dedicated in 1910, of upwards of 324,000 volumes, no more harmful or intoxicating than real light beer, and it is said to be beneficial to those suffering from liver and stomach troubles. But no sooner does it reach the large cities than the work of adulterating it begins. Wine is used sometimes, in the majority of cases, however, it is heavily doped with extracts of Russet wood, which produces a crazed, high intoxicating. Two glasses of it will make a man mad as a drunk. And to this cause are traced largely the murders, robbery and misery of the peon class.

HAYNES

We do not ask you to do our experimenting

During the twenty-one years in which we have been building motor cars, we have never asked the public to do our experimenting. Every part of the Haynes car is designed, checked and thoroughly tested before receiving final O.K.

The American Simms Dual High Tension Magneto is positively the most simple dual ignition ever devised. It was recommended by the Haynes engineers after careful speed and compression tests proved beyond doubt that it was unusually efficient and absolutely dependable.

The Lenox-Novelite Starting and Lighting Separate Unit System was chosen in 1910 because of its high efficiency and has been used on the Haynes car ever since, although numerous other starting and lighting systems have been tested in our laboratories from time to time. This system is dust-proof and has proven itself 100% efficient in every instance. There is no separator, however, on the that has been subjected to a more severe test than the Vulcan Electric Gear Shift. This device is even greater improvement than the starting and lighting system, because it not only simplifies the control but positively prevents gear stripping.

While the electric gear shift is a great invention, it is not radically new, being just a natural development of the electro-magnet, which has been in use since 1839. The same principle is used by steel companies to lift tons and tons of metal; the electric railways adopted it long ago to shift switches automatically, and the bell hammer that strikes the bell in your telephone is actuated by the impulse of a similar magnet.

The Haynes car is not an experiment. It represents the height of refinement, convenience and reliability in motor car design. It's the year-ahead car.

Bloodshed is not new in Vera Cruz. In fact no city on the continent has witnessed such devilish cruelty, such plundering, burning and murdering, as has this place the "True Cross." Depleted buccaneers, in all their awful glory, have sailed into this port and sacked it. It has been a point of vantage which twenty-five thousand acres of land are to be reclaimed from the Hudson river, that more than two hundred and twenty-five acres of the last soil is still under water, not including the great area under the Bayonne, the reclamation of which is a formidable topic of discussion.

The lawyer from the city had a seat beside a farmer on the train, and asking to be sociable he asked the farmer what he had to do with farm life. Finally he queried:

"You don't raise much of Easter out in the country, do you?"

"Well, yes, we do," is the answer. "But you all have religious?"

"Yes, we have."

"The women in the city make a great ado about Easter."

"Guess so."

"A good deal of money spent for new things?"

There was silence for five minutes, and then the farmer asked:

"You passed me a bit back there, but I've fleshy caught on."

"Easter bet?"

"Yes, I kin see you got mixed up a bit."

"Just how, my friend?"

"Why, you call Easter in town we call Ground Hog day out here, and at first I couldn't see why anyone should make a fuss free it, or where the religion came in. It's all right, though, now. We don't let Easter out the hog, and I'll be obliged if you'll do the same for us!"

HAPPY NOW
Family Delighted with Grape Nuts.

"It certainly has been a blessing to our family" writes a young lady in regard to Postum.

"I am one of a family of twelve, who, before using Postum, would make our breakfast on some stimulant, or their complaining of headache, dizziness, sour stomach, etc., from drinking coffee.

"For years mother suffered from palpitation of the heart, sick headache and bad stomach and at times could be taken violently ill. About a year ago she quit coffee and began Postum.

"Her stomach was troubled with headache and dizziness all the time she drank coffee. All these troubles of my mother and brother have disappeared since Postum has taken the place of coffee.

"A sister was ill nearly all her life with dizziness and heart trouble, and about all she cared for was coffee and tea. The doctors told her she might leave them alone, as medicine did her no permanent good.

"She thought nothing would take the place of coffee until we induced her to try Postum. Now our troubles are all gone and she is a happy little woman enjoying life as people should."

MEXICO'S FUTURE PAINTED BLACK

Superman Will Be Needed to Take Place of Huerta.

WILL FACE EMPTY TREASURY

That Will Be Only One of Many Handicaps—Reconstruction of Republic a Harder Problem Than That Following Our Own Civil War—Constitution Increases Difficulty.

That the elimination of Victoriano Huerta, whether it come as the result of resignation, of Constitutional, elections or of successful opposition of the United States, will prove far from a settlement of the Mexican problem is the conclusion of the diplomatic tests in Washington and military experts of the United States.

Indeed, few doubt, adds the New York Tribune's Washington correspondent, that the Mexican "situation" will continue for months or even years. Army and navy men are convinced that if armed intervention be stayed off now it will be only a matter of time before that step will have to be taken.

What Huerta goes some provisional government probably will be arranged, pending an election. Such is the desire of the United States and the definite point of its recognition. The fall of Huerta may be taken as a Constitutionalist victory—it certainly will be by the Constitutionalists—and it is understood in Washington that the provisional president of Mexico will be a great rebel leadership. The election which would follow would go to the Constitutionalists.

Task For a Superman.

There have already been evidences of a split in the Constitutionalist ranks. If there exists any jealousies among those who are now rebels become the government the chances of success will be still further diminished. If Carranza becomes president he will be confronted with a task which, in the opinion of close observers, will call for a superman. If Carranza is hampered by the defection of Villa or any other of his leaders it is believed his task will be hopeless, and that their entire co-operation it will be stupendous.

When Carranza gets to Mexico City he will find an empty treasury. He will find that the Huerta government owes hundreds of thousands of dollars interest on foreign debts. He will be called upon to pay hundreds of millions of dollars in foreign claims. The figure is likely to run far over the $1,000,000,000 mark.

Furthermore, he will not have the funds to meet his civil, political and military obligations.

It is pointed out in Washington that Mexico has got to face a reconstruction period far more difficult than that which followed the civil war in this country, and in the estimation of some observers that unfortunate country has no statesman equipped to guide her through its difficulty. Those observers are convinced that Carranza will find the matter of accomplishing reform work worth probably too slow to suit the pleasure of his people, and that soon he will be confronted with the "Carranzas" and new "Villas" and kindred pests.

Zapata to Be Reckoned With.

Aside from his financial difficulties, Carranza, or whoever may become head of the government, will face a parallel task in suppressing peace and order. As Mexico is infested with bandits. The north is particularly at their mercy. There is no reason to assume that they will cease their marauding because the government in Mexico City has changed.

The Zarathistas of Morelos and other nearby states, who pose as revolutionists but are looked upon as bandits, are not expected to support Carranza. They will follow Zapata, who is credited with ambitions of his own.

There is also a strong likelihood that Huerta's army will disintegrate, and this will mean the addition of many thousand armed men running wild over the country, loyal to no government, responsible to no man. They will all have to be eradicated by Huerta's successor.

Effects of Strife in Mexico.

Says F. J. Stillstone in Leslie's:

Not until the winter out of all organized rebellion could the government at Mexico City undertake the extinction of brigands. If the civil war could be ended at once it would take ten years to put Mexico back into that condition of peace and good order which existed up to the commencement of the Madero revolution. In my opinion that the property owners, the people with something to lose, were crying for peace? Ten years to repair the destruction of three?

A Mexican to whom I suggested this laughed at me. "It will take," said he, "fifty years to put Mexico back where she was three years ago. The country might be purified in ten, but the ruined farms, the shattered industries, the wrecked railroads, the burned towns cannot be restored in a generation. So far our government has shown you the side of the country you know, but you no idea of the worst. But you will get that too, and then your estimate of the wreck and ruin of the past three years of revolution will be increased a thousand per cent."

VINCENT ASTOR'S BRIDE.

Comes From Sturdy American Stock and Fashionable Many Spans.

There is a touch of romance in the Astor-Huntington wedding. Vincent Astor had known Miss Helen D. Huntington since childhood. The lattle spent her early childhood at the old Huntington estate at Rhinebeck, N. Y., which adjoins the Astor estate. The wedding marked the uniting of two families of great wealth. Mr. Astor, following his father's death, came into the possession of estates valued at upward of $60,000,000.

Mrs. Vincent Astor is the daughter of the late William D. Dimmore, a multimillionaire. She is a descendant of Samuel Huntington of Norwich, Conn., a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and on the Huntington side of the family two of her ancestors were justices of the United States supreme court.

The bride has spent most of her life in the country and is fond of outdoor life and athletics, being an expert horsewoman.

Her father, who was graduated from Yale in 1891, was tennis champion of the university, and before she was two years old Miss Huntington began to take an interest in the tennis courts. Later she most other girls brought up at country homes, because practically in seminaries while scarcely more than a child, and before she was ready for the finishing school she was able to pass a sloop and to operate any motor craft.

Giving his impressions of three members of the cabinet about whom the limelight has been playing in the Mexican crisis—Secretary of State Bryan, Secretary of the Navy Daniels and Secretary of War Garrison—the Washington correspondent of the New York Post says:

"As facetious a man as any perhaps in Secretary Daniels. He is a cheerful, inspiring with the ready optimism of the countryman. The least facetious of the three is William J. Bryan, the secretary of state. It is not to human nature to go through the strain they have endured and not have a facetious fling now and then.

"The secretary of state is the first officer of the cabinet, and it is his prerogative to insist that others shall come to him if he likes. But Mr. Bryan is unconventional and quiet. If he receives a dispatch and wants to show it to the secretary of the navy at once he is likely as not to slip into the corridor and walk around to Mr. Daniels' office.

"The head of the navy when its men are under fire in a foreign land should wear a Jordan bow wrapped in gloom if one may believe some of the informations from unofficially sources. This is not Mr. Daniels' style. His cares shaved face is deeply lined, to be sure. It is an oid-young face, but it is essentially kindly and optimistic.

"Mr. Garrison is a round cheeked, stalwart looking man, with gold spectacles and curly gray hair. He uses a sofa back of his desk to hold a map showing the army departments. Books piled on sofas and chairs showed that he had not been sitting in into night without something to occupy his mind. During the height of the war scare he stayed in his office till 12 a. m. and came to work again at 7.30 o'clock in the morning. There were the hours in all the departments for awhile."

A Coincidence.

"I'm afraid, George," said his dancer, "that you are going from bad to worse."

"Quite a coincidence," mutered George. "That's what Clara said when I threw her over for you."

MEXICO CITY GAY IN CRUCIAL HOUR

Noisy, Joyous Crowds Throng Streets of Capital.

GIVE NO SIGN OF ANXIETY.

Evening Promenade Reveals the Avenidas Gathered in Light and Full of an Elegant and Thoughtless Animation. Every Day There Seems Like Sunday to the Stranger.

I arrived at the City of Mexico in the evening, writes Luigi Barzini in the London Telegraph. It was the most active hour of the life of the place—that of the evening promenade. The Avenida San Francisco was bathed in light and full of an elegant and thoughtless animation.

The traffic was blocked by an incredible assembly of vehicles. For long minutes carriages and motorcars, surmounted by a waving and trembling of aigrets, parados plumes, ribbons and all the accessories which merely crown female heads, were compelled to stop in order to disentangle themselves and then resume their slow movement, perched close to each other in a quiet rapge line.

Sometimes shops read upon the crowds on the footways the dazzling reflections of their mirrors. On the thresholds of the "confiterias," of the bars, the tea rooms and in front of the cafes housed in ancient and noble Spanish palaces—was crowded the whole of the masculine aristocracy of the city, rigorously dressed in the English style, proofless in their salutations to the ladies, in affectionate gestures to acquaintances and embraces for friends.

Superb Horsemen.

The theaters were opening the restaurants were full, the cinematographs were emptying their crowds.

Returning from their daily gallop in the forest were superb horsemen, in the magnificent national costume which is the riding dress of the Mexican gentleman. Proudly erect on their tall, ancient mounts, their feet encased in massive leather stirrups, they sail in groups, scintillating with buttons and silver embroidery, and with enormous sombreros bordered with lace a little of the cowboy, a little of the musketeer and something of the gaucho. The air was soft, the air serene and waves of music came from crowded resorts, bringing emotions of cannonettes, languid bars of habaneras, reminiscences of Zarzuelas and operas.

And the civil war! The revolutions! The sanguinary battles! Only must come to Mexico to understand how such things become distant and vague. One enters an atmosphere of oblivion, of indifference, indolence, enjoyment. News is circulated, which would place any other city in the world in a state of anguish. It does not cause any more emotion than a weather bulletin. Mexico City goes on amusing itself.

No Hustle and Bustle.

Nobody is in a hurry. The man who goes to a pheasantry. This intelligent, sensual, aristic race has discovered that all the things which can be obtained by running are not worth those which can be enjoyed while walking slowly, the spectacles which one can relish while looking around, the conversations one overhears, the beauties one admires, the scenes which cause delight as one proceeds calmly. Kiney race is an hour of life thrown away—to say nothing of the failures which it causes.

For this reason Mexico City always wears a Sunday street. Business is done by chance, by stopping to converse with acquaintances. One gives and receives an embrace. One drinks something at a neighboring bar, exchanges impressions about the last bullfight, and at every street corner groups of people are stationed to glance at the passing vehicles and moderate as to which is the best road to take. At midday all the offices and shops are closed for the siesta. Lunch is taken at noon. The American "quick lunch" is an unknown barbarity. Everything is done comfortably. The houses, the palaces, the innumerable churches, have in their spacious amplitude also a restful and solemn aspect.

BOY SCOUTS ARE EAGER TO FIGHT

Services of 1,200 Offered to New York National Guard.

ALL THOROUGHLY TRAINED.

Knowledge of Field Army Regulations Would Make These Excellent Soldiers in Mexico Are Sorely Disappointed.

Twelve hundred members of the Boy Scouts of America, thoroughly trained for active service in the field, are ready in the New York district alone for enlistment with the United States troops in the event of war with Mexico, down to the youngest members of the scouts, and the average age is eighteen years. All of them, according to Major Vidal, U. S. A., adjutant general of the organization, are in splendid shape for real service, and so far as enthusiasm is concerned the scouts are anxious to go.

The military operations in Mexico have had a marked effect on the boys' ardor for the service, and, as stated in the report of the Third Corps, U. S. A., before that "in every troop there has been an increase in membership."

"I can offer only 1,200 young men as volunteers. For some time there are only that number in the boy scouts who have reached the prescribed age of eighteen years. But there are thousands odd thousands between the ages of ten and eighteen years who are better than fair for hospital duty and willing to prove their patriotic qualities in a crisis of this kind."

Fired With the War Spirit.

To differ from the Boy Scouts in charge of national guard headquarters, Major Vidal, who is a member of long experience in the field, was strongly Major Vidal continued. "Some of the boys are so anxious that they are ready to be accepted by Uncle Sam for the first member at Vera Cruz. The boys of the organization have been fired with the spirit of the time, and enough to be accepted by Uncle Sam as volunteers particularly have been active day and night.

They would make the most desirable kind of soldiers, it is said, because of the military training they have received under the direction of experienced army men, such as Major Vidal and Major Kenyon, U. S. A., the Adjut. Genl of the Boy scouts and formerly an adjutant general of the New York National Guard.

It is the hope of the scout leaders and public officers that before long there will be so many boys with the scout training ready to be called into the service that the scouts may be organized into companies, and be used as units of the regular army.

Army Rules Prevail.

The drilling and other military operations of the scouts are carried on with strict adherence to the United States army regulations. The boys are accustomed to feel at home in the field, which they are ready, if need be, to prove to the satisfaction of the officers to instruct the youngsters in Hygiene and Sanitation.

Inasmuch as arrangements are one of the reasons of all scouts, and for this part of their training the boys use a .22 caliber rifle, modeled after the regulation piece, and also any member of the New York district are not eligible for service, the rifle is not used as soon as possible. The scouts are permitted to use the target drill half an hour at intervals and likewise the target rifles.

SYNOPSIS.

John Valiant, a rich society favorite, suddenly discovers that the Valiant coat-of-arms, which he has always thought was the principal asset of his family, is not the property of his father but of the corporation. His entire remaining wealth lies in the family estate, which Willie Ball, his cousin, thinks it a good idea to turn into a "dude ranch." Jack Valiant, younger brother of John, is a cowboy in Idaho, but he is a gentleman for all that. Jack's sweetheart, Betty Lee, and Mabel Bristow, orphan ward of the senior Valiants, father and a "bad egg," are visiting John at the family estate when the Valiants arrive. Season and Valiant create a duel on the premises by their mutual dislike, which wears off somewhat and they build up a friendship. John is anxious to show Valiant around his ancestral home. He is surprised to find his cousin Willie and Mabel Bristow in the secret-passage bedroom on the second floor, composed by a monstrous gray old man waited on by an ancient negro named Jerobam, who had been a slave of his father's.

The doctor was a sallow taciturn man, with a sardonic face, eyebrows like frosted thistles, a mouth as if made with one pen-stroke. Just "tuck a bead nearly bald, set on a neck that would not have disqualified a rear ele on

"Well, I'm very sorry," said Valiant, "but I'm living in it at present."

The edge of a smile lifted this carefully trained mustache over the other's white teeth. It had the professional courtesy of a smile, however, of you say so. But

Valiant urged, with a gesture that included all, "If you c... to dismount and rest," he said, "I shall be honored, though I am afraid I offer little in such hospitality as I should wish."

The doctor raised his broad hat. "Thank you, sir," he said, with a soft accent that definitely situated the latter "I. "But we mustn't intrude on you. It was a severe shock to your nerves."

The place has been mismanaged for any number of years, and we had no idea it was to acquire a tenant. You will overlook our riding through, I trust. I'm afraid the neighborhood has got used to considering this a sort of neutral land. It's a pleasure to know that the Court is to be reclaimed, sir. Come along, Chilly," he added. "Your tax has a barrow under the house, I reckon—hang the cunning little devil!"

He waved his hat at the perch and turned his horse down the path, side by side with the golden chestnut. After their tropped the others, horses walking wearily, riders talking in low voices, the girls turning often to send swift bird-like glances behind them to where the straight masculine figure will wood with the yellow sunshine on his face. They did not leap the wall this time, but filed decorously through the swinging gate to the Red Road. Then, as they passed from view behind the hedge, John Valiant heard the younger voices break out together like the sound of a bomb thrown into a poultry-yard

John Valiant stood watching till the last rider was out of sight. There was a warm flush of color in his face.

At length he turned with a shoulder of a sigh, opened the hall door wide and stalking a hundred yards away, put down on the shady grass and began to whistle, with his eyes on the door.

Presently he was rewarded. On a sudden, around the edge of the sill poured a sharp suspicious little mongrel. Then, like a flash of tawny light, the fox terrier scuttered and shot for the thicket.

The brown tried house in the village was big and square and faced the sleepy street. A one-storied wing contained a small door with a doctor's brass plate on the clapboard beside it. Doctor Sculthall was one of Mrs. Mary Valiant's few intimate guests—for she would have deemed the word boarder a gratuitous insult, so close to them than to said. Another was the major, who for a decade had occupied the six-dollar-a-week front bedroom on the second floor, composed by a monstrous gray old man waited on by an ancient negro named Jerobam, who had been a slave of his father's.

"Wonders will never cease!" said the young man aside, exchanging "Well, our quarry is here somewhere. From the way the dogs act I should say he's hobbled into the house. With your permission I'll take one of them and see." He stooped and snapped a leash on a dog-collar.

"I'm with you, sir," said Valiant, "but I'm living in it at present."

Quinine in India.

"It is estimated that one-sixth of the world's supply of quinine is used in India," said a well known Chicago doctor at the Hotel Sherman.

"Java is perhaps the world more quinine than any other country. At one time India tried to lead the world in the supply of quinine, and if that country should at present take steps to extend the culture of cinchona it may only protect its own interest, but perform a world-wide service.

"In 1886, 15,000,000 pounds of bark were exported from Ceylon; but in 1910 the exports had fallen to 3,000 pounds. For a number of years quinine has stood at such a low price that bark producers have had only a small margin of profit. Under these circumstances it is hardly likely that they have continued to plant broadly, and there is a great risk, therefore, that a rapid advance in price may take place at any time. Although at present there are some thousands of acres in India planted with cinchona trees, yet in order to minimize the risk of a great enhancement in the price of quinine in the early future it would be well if the acreage under cinchona were large by extension."

Finger Prints of Babies.

At Spokane the finger prints of all newly-born children are taken upon the certificate of birth. By this means the identity of a child can be traced from the cradle to the grave. If that method were resorted to at boarding schools, where unfortunate mothers leave their babies, there would always remain a means of identification. A recent case has called attention to this class of human grists.

FOR AND AGAINST THE BEARD

Controversy Is an Old One and Has Been Waged With Considerable Bitterness.

We need not go back so far as the eighteenth century to find Englishmen who held that "God made the face as nature." In the nineteenth, James Ward B. A., in a "Defense of the Beard," set forth eighteen reasons for retaining it, mainly sentimental, reenforced by artistic considerations. "What would a Jupiter be without a beard? As well as Hercules." Ward quoted a treatise entitled "Shaving—A Breach of the Sabbath and a Hindrance to the Spread of the Gospel." One of his arguments was that "Providence had manifestly designed the beard as a protection for the throat and chest." But what about the woman's throat?

Nowhere was there more fulsome eulogies sung against beards than at the hands of court. The "black beard" of the inns left no how offenders were fined for wearing beards, and sometimes were compulsorily shaved by order of court. And the prejudice against the toasted barrister still lingers. Vice Chancellor Bacon carried his dislike to boarded or manicured barristers so far that he always refused to employ them. Even now there are few leading counsel with beards, and I can remember only one unshaved barrister of great eminence, the late Judah Philip Benjamin, Q. C.—Oliver Sheppard Benjamin, who wore a mustache and a goatee.—London Chronicle.

GOOD ROADS GATHERING

Charlevoix County Demonstrates Its Interests in Better Highways

Recent Supreme Court Decision Delays State Road-Building Does Not Discourage Rogers

A big county good-roads meeting was held in this city last Wednesday for the purpose of formulating a policy for the improving of county highways. The meeting was attended by the road builders from all the different places in the county. There were delegatiins from East Jordan, Boyne City, and Traverse City, of the Western Michigan Development Bureau. The Hon. Frank Hamilton of Traverse City, the pioneer road builder for this part of the state, took part in the meeting. In the evening he told of the road building operations in Grand Traverse County, and illustrated his remarks with lantern slide views of the most important road jobs. It is expected that there will be increased interest in road building in Charlevoix County as a result of the meeting.

The fact that the supreme court has declared unconstitutional the state auto tax law from which the state highway commission expected to receive $750,000 in auto license, will not have the effect to interfere with good road construction in Michigan this year, according to State Highway Commissioner Rogers. The state officials say that various townships and counties, where the county system of road building is in operation, propose to continue road building during the summer, trusting that the next legislature will appropriate sufficient funds to pay all rewards for the highways constructed under the supervision of the state.

There are on file in Rogers' office applications for several road jobs amounting to $1,384,111, while the department on July 1, when $300,000 in trunk line funds became available, will have a balance of $600,000 for rewards for highways. Not all of the applications for reward roads will be granted by Commissioner Rogers, but it is expected that the reward roads approved will total over $1,000,000, thus leaving the state about $600,000 short of having sufficient funds to aid the highway department to pay the rewards.

Rogers says that many county and township road commissioners have notified him that they will not stop road building but will continue the work and demand of the next legislature that funds be provided for payment of the rewards. Rogers says that with 70 or more of the 83 counties of the state demanding money for reward roads the members of the legislature will undoubtedly be compelled to appropriate enough money to pay for all reward roads built during the present year.

"Owing to the recent ruling of the supreme court that the automobile tax law is unconstitutional, the state highway department will be unable to pay rewards promptly on roads which are completed during the year of 1914," said Commissioner Rogers.

"There is running in the ordinary state reward fund of the appropriation for the fiscal year, about $600,000 which will be sold out after the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1914, upon state reward roads completed and accepted prior to that time. Payments will be made until the funds are exhausted in the order in which the applications were filed.

"Should any road be built and the department be unable to pay reward, owing to lack of funds, the township will have to wait at least until the next session of the legislature for their money. Judging from the past it is reasonable to expect that the next legislature will appropriate sufficient funds to take care of the rewards on all roads built. However, the department is unable to guarantee payment."

The last six months of 1913 were a record breaker as far as acceptance of reward roads by the highway department is concerned, nearly one-fourth of all state reward roads in the state being accepted during the final half year of 1913. At present there are 2,363 miles of state reward roads in Michigan and 609 miles were accepted by the department the final 6 months of last year.

Asked whether he would recommend to the governor that the auto tax law be altered in such a way that it will be made constitutional or a certain amount be appropriated by the legislature for state reward roads, Commissioner Rogers said: "It certainly would be a calamity if the legislature should attempt to rectify the mistakes in the auto tax law and then have the courts again find the measure unlawful! I don't know whether it would be better to appropriate an amount sufficient to pay for the road building work to be done this year and rectify the auto tax law, or make no effort to change the laws in regard to licensing of automobiles and appropriate funds to build roads as was done in the previous years."

Governor Ferris on Thursday issued the first "road law day" proclamation ever penned by a Michigan executive. Elated at the success of the "road law" proclamation by the Huron Shore Road association last year the governor determined to make the proposition state wide. He designated April 4 and 5, as "road be days" and in his proclamation the governor pointed out that although many great million dollars was expended last year in improving state roads, "there is much yet to be desired."

Don't Let It Touch the Ground

Unfurl it to the breeze, and do not let it touch the ground.

It has been planted on foreign soil, and in its defense American blood has been spilled.

Uncover your head as it passes; salute it as it rises "staff high."

Let no man dishonor it.

Do not let it touch the ground.

LEMIEURS

Praise From Sir Rupert is Praise Indeed

We have received the following kind letter from our excellent, loyal friend, "Mac" Harris, of Boyne City:

Boyne City, Michigan, May 18, 1914.
Capt. Willard A. Smith,
Charlevoix, Michigan.

Dear Willard:

I am again reminded by the receipt of this week's issue of the Sentinel, that I want to write, congratulating you upon your recent modest anniversary announcement, and upon the fact that in a few years the Sentinel will have passed the half-century mark.

It is worth something to a man to look back over a long, consistent, active life in his chosen profession, and when I look back and then forward to the present and see that the Sentinel, while always standing for the best interests of your City first, your County, State, Nation and Party, and the general welfare of humanity upon all public questions,—has steadily developed, increasing its influence and power for good in the gradually enlarged field that it has had an active part in creating, and that its own development has kept pace in the front ranks of the march in material progress; you secure that retrospect which comes to the "Good and Faithful Servant." And my dear respected friend, I bespeak for you the reward that comes to the good and faithful.

No doubt you would rather take your reward occasionally than in one instalment, and I concede you are entitled to both; and "Here's to you" that your days may be long in the home of your choice.!

I gladly accept on this anniversary, for yourself and the Sentinel, my highest regard and esteem.

Yours very truly,
J. M. Harris.

Of "issues of fact" there are twenty cases, and in the criminal section there are sixteen cases. Of course in all sections of the calendar, as usual, cases will go over, but it looks like a week and an adjournment. As we go to press there are no final dispositions of any number in the calendar.

The Banquet of States and Nations on the splendid and newly fitted up banquet hall of the Methodist Church last Friday evening was an event of more than usual interest. The main room of the basement presented a picture that was well worth seeing, and the surprise was all the more intense from having first entered the "overflow" room on the main auditorium floor, which of itself was beautifully adorned. This latter room is ample for ordinary events, but the two halls combined constitute a most valuable adjunct to the work of pastor and congregation.

All the candidates for governor have been invited as have the candidates for congress from this district. An effort will be made to make this the most successful gathering in the history of the club—which means that the committee will have to go some.

The editor of this paper has two kid grandsons over at his house. As the scribe returns home for his daily sustenance and needed rest from his editorial affairs, with a secretary of state who does not measure to the knee joint of any of his predecessors of either party—American citizens have been slaughtered, and American consuls have been outrageously treated imprisoned, and perhaps murdered. In all reason why should these things be permitted?

We need not discuss the "Wilson policy" in passing judgment on the president's chief adviser, the Bryan wing must still be recognized for use in 1916, "Safety first" seems to govern in the white house council room.

But the fact remains that Mr. Bryan is not big enough for his job. He has brought himself, his party, and his country into international ridicule and neutralized whatever of freedom, patriotic purposes the president may have had in his Mexican policy,—and it is the Mexican policy that stands foremost in public interest.

The Lesson of Memorial Day

Since Alexander crossed the Hellespont the grandest army that ever assembled under a flag was that which carried "Old Glory" to victory from 1861 to 1865. It was not only great in numbers and valor, it was great in its intelligence and its loyal devotion to a just cause. Gen. Sherman, one of the greatest military strategists in the world's history, said that he could find a brigadier general in the ranks of any regiment of his great army.

Dismissed by duties, and shot it was still a great army that marched in review before the president after Appomattox. To-day it is but a remnant of that phalanx that remains. By these will be borne next Saturday to the Silent City of the dead the flag which they carried in battle.

Their beads are now bowed, but they carry the flag proudly—the flag that typifies the power of a united and mighty nation. To the battles of Lincoln's day has been added Santiago, Manilla and Vera Cruz—battles fought for the vindication of national honor and the enfranchisement of oppressed races appealing to high heaven for justice.

Veterans, walk erect again! Square your shoulders as you did in '61! Bear the flag aloft! Yours is a noble heritage—the love and devotion of a Nation. Your days are numbered in the land for which you fought, but a grateful people will long remember your valorous deeds.

God bless the Grand Army of the Republic.

The American Prime Minister

The "Mount McKinley" of Mr. Bryan's conspicuity as a political carpiece is no doubt, as between his "Crown of Thorns" speech in a national democrat convention, and his present status as foreign minister of the United States.

The first mentioned ascension threw him into the fine-light as the exponent of political and financial doctrines which were twice repudiated by the people. But, like Doctor Dowie and Cowin, he had followers who hung upon his words as the utterances of a "prophet. And during all these years he has called himself a democrat.

As the recognized bender of a wing of the army of the faithful, he was given a seat at the right hand of the president. In "tipping time of peace" Mr. Bryan, with the help of one or more professors of international law, might have worried along through a four year period without any special discredit to himself, his country or his party.

But the crisis of his career fell upon tempestuous times, conditions involving practical hostilities with a foreign power came upon him when he was engrossed in a prevaricating contract, and he was compelled to revert to his official salary for a living.

And here we are, when we need a statesman of the Blaine, Root or Hay type in the conduct of international affairs, with a secretary of state who does not measure to the knee joint of any of his predecessors of either party.

American citizens have been slaughtered, and American consuls have been outrageously treated imprisoned, and perhaps murdered. In all reason why should these things be permitted?

We need not discuss the "Wilson policy" in passing judgment on the president's chief adviser, the Bryan wing must still be recognized for use in 1916. "Safety first" seems to govern in the white house council room.

AN ELKS EVENT AT PETOSKEY

Some Charlevoix Girl of Youthful Rating May Go Sky High

A young lady from Charlevoix probably will take a trip in a hydro-aeroplane at Petoskey next month. One of the features of the Michigan Elks' Convention, to be held in Petoskey June 23, 24 and 25, is a series of flights by an aviator who will carry passengers.

The most popular young lady, as attested to in a voting contest, will get a free ride. Charlevoix is especially interested in the big convention, as there are nearly fifty Elks here belonging to Petoskey lodge. A large attendance of other citizens from Charlevoix is likewise expected.

Fully six thousand visitors will throng Petoskey during the big meet. There will be boat rides, auto trips, dances, etc., and the ladies of Elks will be especially provided for in every way.

The big parade, on June 25, will be one of the principal attractions. One of its features will be the Little Traverse Bay sea serpent, 150 feet long, which will wiggle in a life-like manner, spouting smoke and fire.

Such a celebration as the Elks will hold next month in Petoskey has never been seen in northern Michigan.

ANCIENT ALFALFA

Can be Traced Back to Garden of Eden and Comes to Michigan Clad in Many Victories

Boasting the plant on which old King Nebuchadnezzar fed—the grass on the Babylonian potentate ate for his salad in the business of three agricultural experts now touring western Michigan. Here are some facts that were and were not told:

Alfalfa can be traced back to the Garden of Eden. It always has been known to man but—it is only in recent years that farmers in this section of the state have become interested in the growing of the grass that Babylonia's green king foraged when he turned himself out to pasture in his periods of madness.

The plant, according to agricultural experts, first was grown in Greece, the nation if you please, though some critics believe it was first sown in Persia. However as to this alfalfa didn't become known until Greece got its fingers on some of the stuff. This said, was in the year of 146, B. C., some little time ago. From the Greek revolving plants were taken to Spain and France. Julius Cesar learned of the wonderful qualities of the food and he is blamed for its introduction into many countries. The Spaniards imported alfalfa to America in the sixteenth century, and its cultivation began in the white house, the east and from the west.

California claims to be the originator of the "Alfalfa movement" in the United States, and today this state claims to be the real home of growing the grass. The acres devoted to alfalfa in that state has doubled within the past three years and the value of the 1913 crop was $20,000,000.

Alsalfa isn't only good for hay. Not by a jugful. California claims its big grade of honey goes back or tracer comes from the alfalfa flowers. In fine poultry feeds on alfalfa meal, and its irrigated valleys grow the stuff most abundantly.

What are some of the excellent qualities of alfalfa, Mr. Farmer? It doesn't need and don't want to pump water. It needs little irrigation. It comes to Michigan clad in victories for it has been successfully grown in Colorado, in Montana, in Wyoming and in Arizona, and in other desert states.

Military Movies Postponed

Major M. J. Phillips writes the editor of this paper that he cannot be with us with the National Guard pictures in June as planned.

The Major is leaving within a few days to superintend the execution of a big picture contract for the Canadian government which will take him from Calgary on the west to St. Johns, N. B., on the east, and to camps near Niagara Falls, Toronto, Quebeck and Montreal, leaving again in August for Goderich, Nova Scotia and Sydney, Sydney, N. S.

He hopes to be here with the pictures some time in July.

Novak is Deserving

It is against the policy of this paper to select a candidate for preferment for primary elections; but if four years as under sheriff, with a creditable record is worth anything, Chris. Novak is several points to the good in the primary race.

This paper reserves its mention for the big fight in November.

In The Field

Ex-Senator Wm. Mears is contemplating entering the field as a congressional candidate in his district, says the East Jordan Enterprise, though as yet he has made no announcement. If he goes into the contest it will be as an out-and-out protection Republican.

ANNOUNCEMENT PARTY UNIQUE

Engagement of Miss Harriet Bates to Galo E. Hines of Michigan Made Known at Pretty Function

(Boyne City Independent)

Mrs. A. W. Bates announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Harriet Bates to Mr. Galo E. Hines, of Charlevoix, Michigan, Saturday afternoon at a delightful luncheon given at the Bates home on South Main street.

The living room, music room and den were decorated in white carnations, palms, ferns and calla lillies.

The guests were entertained with a guessing contest called a nutcrackle romance. The prize, won by Mrs. L. B. Scott, was a pen and ink sketch drawn by Miss Bates. It was in the dining room that the real love story was told in a decidedly unique and original way. In this room the color scheme was pink and white. A shower of pink cupids on pink ribbons hung from the dome in the center of the room above the table. On this was a gilt fairow basket, filled with pink hearts partially hidden among flowers and pink tulle and bound together by a gilt chain and padlock.

The table was lovely in its profusion of hearts, cupids and lovers knots of tulle. The center piece was a huge heart locked with a padlock and covered with maiden-hair ferns. Around the edge of the table were small hearts with a key for each guest. They were instructed in the following verse to unite the keys: And you shall see, if it will open the lock, if 'tis your key, then you shall be the one the news to impart.

Successfully each struggled diligently to open the lock of the large heart in the center with her key but in vain. The lock of the large heart, the honor guest tried with wonderful success. The lock flew quickly open and upon lifting the cover all eyes beheld a cake in the image of a gold-band wedding ring. Just in the center of this a loving cup supporting a cupid in miniature kneeling on a heart and holding a card upon which were the names of the groom and bride-elect and also the date on which the happy event will take place.

The cupid was crowned with a beautiful diamond solitaire, the engagement ring. The gold band ring cake was cut for the unmarried ladies present, a fairy and the ring inside denoted who was to be the next bride. Miss Ethel Greenwood got the piece of cake containing the ring.

The covers were lifted from the hearts suspended above and as the faces of the couple were disclosed a merry chuckle broke from the joyous guests. The living room rang with merriment as congratulations and best wishes for a happy wedded life were showered upon the bride-elect and as well seated for the serving of delicious refreshments a speech from Miss Harriet was called for to which she happily responded.

The refreshments included tea, dainty heart-shaped sandwiches and wafers, brick ice cream, heart shaped cakes having on them the initials "G. H. and B." in pink and white and pink, and white after-dinner mints.

The bridal table had a marriage catechism which amused the guests and following this a flower wedding sorting contest was enjoyed. The prize which fell was won by Miss Lola Wilbur was a framed picture of the bride elect.

The wedding will take place in June and the couple will make their home in Charlevoix.

The Reason For It

Sir Conan Doyle, of England, is coming to the United States on a visit. In an interview he expresses unbounded admiration for this country, its institutions, its progress and the stability of its form of government. He says it is beyond the power of any man to estimate its future greatness and material wealth of the country.

The distinguished romancer will find building of romance in the progress of American governmental affairs. We have our domestic troubles, but whichever way the weather-vane points, politically, the American people with a wisdom and loyalty born of the spirit of '76, stand behind the government t.

A democrat sits in the White House, but there is not a republican in the land, of right-heart and mind, who will not vie with any happy democrat in doing honor to the person and character of the president of the United States. No democrat can yell louder than a good republican in honoring the personality and authority of the executive of the republic.

Sir Conan's country and Uncle Sam's country are quite busy now in the rectifying business—the first in Ireland and the latter in Mexico. But God reigns and the cause of the oppressed at Washington and London will live, and will continue to live through future cycles of time.

The VALIANTS of VIRGINIA

By HALLIE ERMINIE RIVES

SYNOPSIS.

John Valiant, a rich society favorite, suddenly learns that the Valiant estate, which was the principal source of his income, has been mortgaged to pay over his private income tax. There is a complete collapse. His entire remaining fortune consists of an old house, a few White bull dog and Damon's cash, a negro servant, Uncle Jeff, and a Jim Crow car. Accompanied by his valet, Hilliard, he arrives at the family estate, Valiant Hall, in the Virginia hills. Jeff, who has not been informed of the family crash, is overjoyed at his master's return. Valiant finds Damon's cousin, Jefferson Davis Valiant, living there with his mother and daughter, Jefferson is amorous, but Valiant is not. He recognizes Sally Ann, the girl he had danced with in the Virginia reel at the new owner's reception, as the girl he had met in the hotel lobby.

"Till I was was high John Valiant lay on his back in the fragrant grass, meditatively watching a brown-and-white chicken-hawk draw widening circles against the blue and listening to the vibrant tattoo of a "pecker-wood" on a faraway tree, and the timorous wee whistle of a bob-white. The whole place was very quiet now. For just one thrilling moment I had burgeoned into sound and movement; when the sweaty horses had stood quivering and stamping in the yard with the hounds sweltering between their legs and the riding-coats winking like rubies in the early sunshine!

Had she recognized him as the smudged tinkerer of the stalled car? "Who are we then? Who, that I could look through the window," he chuckled. "I could take both of them, but she didn't give me a sway, true little sport that she was. And she won't, I can't think of any reason, but I know! Was she angry? I wonder!"

At length he rose and went back to the house. With a bunch of keys he had found he went to the stables, after some difficulty gained access, and propped the crazy doors and windows open to the sun. The building was airy and well-lighted and contained a dozen roomy box-stalls, a spacious loft and a carriage-house. The straw bedding had been used several, mouldering sacking and rotted hay lay in the mangers, and the warped harness, hanging on its pegs, was a smelly mass of mildew and decay. He found a stiff, mowed sway the festooning cobwebs, and moved the debris piece-meal.

"Pretty!" he said with satisfaction. "There's a place for the motor—if Uncle Jefferson ever gets it here."

It was noon when he returned, after a washup in the lake, to the meal with which Aunt Daphne, in a costume dinly suggestive of a brass-band petticoat with a gingham apron on, regaled him. Fried chicken, corn-bread so soft and flaky that it had to be lifted from the pan with a spoon, browned potatoes, and in his surprise, fresh milk. "Ah done crav dah ol' cow ever sah," explained Aunt Daphne. "Case she gotter be milked, or she run dry as de Red Sea fo' de children ob Isrel."

"Dat? Dat's jes' turnip-tops, suh, wid a hunk o' bacon in do pot. Lawsamms, ef ca'ly do me good ter see you ef'ar in dat way, suh. Reckin yo' got er appetite! Hyuh, Hyuh!"

"I have. I never guessed it before, and it's a magnificent discovery. However, it suggests unwholesome thoughts. Daphne, how long do you estimate a man can dine like this on—well, say on a hundred dollars?"

"Ah! I can grow all those things myself, you think."

"Yo' ca'ly kin," said Aunt Daphne. "Ev'body do. De chicks an done peck fo dyeselves en de puddah things—yo' ole gyeter "coming ter de day" yo' ketch."

Valiant ate his dessert with a thoughtful smile wishfully his brow. As he pushed back his chair he raised his hands together and laughed aloud. "Back to the soil!" he said. "John Valiant, farmer! The miracle of it is that it sounds good to me. I want to raise my own grub and till my own soil. I want to be my own man! And I'm beginning to see my way. Crops will have to wait for another season, but there's water and pasture for cattle now. Damon's cash will tide us on that hillside, too. I must look into that."

He filled his pipe and climbed the staircase to the upper floor. There were many bedrooms with great four-posted, canopied beds and old-fashioned carved furniture of mahogany and early maple, and in one he found a great colonial chest filled with bed-linen and napery. In these rooms were more evidences of decay. The bedroom he mentally chose for his own was the plainest of all and was above the library, fronting the veranda garden. It had a great black desk with many glass-knobbed drawers and a book-rack.

He lingered longest in a room whose door was painted The Hilarium. It had evidently been a nursery and schoolroom. Here on the walls were many shelves wound over with network of cobwebs, and piled with the oddest assemblage of toys. There were school-books, two thumbed and dog-eared, "Irish First Reader" to Cæsar's Gallic Wars, with names of small Valiants scrawled on their flyleaves. He carefully relocked the door of this room, he wished to keep the toys and books with his own hands.

In the upper hall again he leaned from the window, smiling the farflung scent of orchards and peach-blows fragrance. The soft cooing and stamping in the yard with the hounds sweltering between their legs and the riding-coats winking like rubies in the early sunshine!

Had she recognized him as the smudged tinkerer of the stalled car? "Who are we then? Who, that I could look through the window," he chuckled. "I could take both of them, but she didn't give me a sway, true little sport that she was. And she won't, I can't think of any reason, but I know! Was she angry? I wonder!"

once he stopped short; there was a sudden movement on the bed behind—the sound of light feet footfalls, of some one rushing away.

He made a lunge for the door, but with a great Chan love himself from the retraining grasp and dashed into the bustee. "A child, no doubt," he thought as he plunged in pursuit, "and that lubberly brute will scare it half to fragments."

He pulled up with an exclamation. In a narrow wood-path a little way from his party hidden by a wind fall stood a girl, her skirt transfixed with a wickedly lagged sapling. He saw instantly how it had happened—the rhododil had blocked the way, and she had sprung clear over it, not noting the screened tree, which now

WITH THE AID OF SORCERY

Women of Sardinia Thought They Had a Chance to Recover a Buried Treasure.

An old Sardinian woman named Anna Romano has been arrested at Bassari charged with obtaining money under false pretenses.

The Italian penal code has no provision dealing with moral and consequently when Anna Romano was surprised at midnight by the police surrounded by several women holding torches over a hole she had excavated in the courtyard of a house, despite the fact that the women was openly engaged in magical practices, she was accused of swindling money from the credulous peasants.

The woman admitted that they had given the sorceress money and she promised her arrest, as they were convinced she was on the point of unearthing great treasure. The police do not believe in treasures, however, and carry Anna Romano will be sentenced to a long term of imprisonment.

Strange as it may seem, the sorcerer of the treasure is corroborated by fact. Anna Romano is in possession of a document written in the sixteenth century in which it is related that a wealthy woman of Bassari, fearing a French invasion, hid all the money, jewels and plate she owned in a secluded place.

This woman was subsequently murdered and her body was buried in the courtyard of her house. A faithful retainer heard her mistress were armed or seek a locket containing the document with the description of the place where the treasure had been hidden.

When Anna Romano was arrested she had in her possession the locket the murdered woman and the locket with the secret document. The police found the locket but not the document.

WOULD HAVE HAD THE MONEY

Sharp Cold-Blooded Suggestion to Engine Driver, Made by the Prince Left Wife's Club.

An amazing story of particular interest at the moment is the contention by the duke of Sutherland by Lord Duffield in "My Memories." When the shade of Parnell visited this country, the late King Edward, who was then prince of Wales, told him that the duke of Sutherland owned large estates in Ireland, as well as in England. The shade is alleged to have said: "He must be very rich. Of course, when you come to the throne you will—" And here he made an expressive gesture with his finger across his throat.

Lord Duffield was on close terms of intimacy with the late king, who, although he had the reputation of affability and geniality, drew very plainly the limits which guarded his dignity. On one occasion his late majesty was leaving Wales's club, and he had to pass through a room in which people did not usually smoke. Some off-duty

"Would'n that theory lead to a wholesale evasion of responsibility?"

"Perhaps. I'm no philosopher. But a blackbird or a red cat is an profit even when he is thieving, that I'd let him have the corn. I'm like Lord Little Dreamtimer in 'The Malkade' who was so tender-hearted that he couldn't execute anybody' and planned to begin with guinea-pigs and work up. Only I'm afraid I couldn't even manage the guinea-pigs."

"Me neither. You wouldn't find many to practise on here. Do you raise guinea-pigs up North?"

"Ah," he said regretfully, "you tax me, too. Have I by chance a large letter N tattooed upon my manly bow? But I suppose it's the accent. Uncle Jefferson catalogued me in five minutes. He said he didn't know why I was from 'de North', but he knowed I've entered upon a new life, so the way."

"You're lucky to have them. Uncle Jefferson and Aunt Daph might have allowed out of a plantation of the last century. They're contented ante-bellum. Most of the negroes are more or less spoiled, is you'll find. I'm afraid." She turned the conversation blandly. "Had you seen Damon's Court before?"

"No, never."

"Do you like the general plan of the place?"

"Do I like it?" cried John Valiant. "Do I like it?"

A quick pleasure glanced across her face. "Is one of you to say it that way. We ask that question so offhand it's become a shibboleth. We had a sun-dried seaweed or the elusive scent that clings to a tuft of long-plucked heath. Mine was 'Thum stands absolved, then," he said, bending to with a condescending commonness. "Mine. "Do—do you run like that when you're not frightened?"

"When I'm caught red-handed. Don't you?"

He looked pointed

She pointed to the flowers. "I had stolen them, and I was trying to "escape off wid on" as the negroes say. Shocking, isn't it? But you see nobody has lived here since long before I was born, and I suppose the kleptomania habit has become ingrown."

"But," he interrupted, "there's acres of them going to waste. Why on earth wouldn't you have them?"

"Of course I know better today, but there was a—a special reason. Why I come and this is the nearest place where they grow. My mother wanted some for this particular day."

"Good heavens!" he cried. "You don't think you can't are right on take for them? Why, you can 'scape off with the whole garden any time!"

A droll little gleam of naive mischief darted at him suddenly out of spotted trees; dodged back again. "Aren't you just a little rash with other people's property?"

"Other people's!"

"What will the owner say?"

He bent back one of the long jessamine stems and wound it around the knob. "I can answer for him. Besides, I owe you something, you know. I rebuked you this morning—of your brush."

He looked at him, abruptly serious. "Why did you do that?"

"Sanctuary. His two beady eyes begged so hard for it. Twenty ravenous hounds, they said, and a dozen galloping horses. And look what a poor shivering little red-brown mouse set I am!"

For test an instant the brown-gold head gave a quick imperious toss, like a high-mettled pony under the thong of the whip. But as suddenly the shadow of resentment passed, the mobile face under the bent hat-brim turned thoughtfully. "Do you care so much about him. 'Do you think it's wrong to kill things?' she asked gravely.

"Oh, fear, no," he smiled. "I haven't a single ism. I'm not even a vegetarian."

"But you would be if you had to kill your own meat?"

"Perhaps. So many of us would. As a matter of fact I don't hunt myself. I'm an informer."

"Why don't you hunt?"

"I don't enjoy it." He flushed slightly. "I hate firearms," he said, a trifle diffidently. "I always have. I don't know why. Idiosyncrasy. I suppose. But I shouldn't care for anything, even with bows and arrows, I would kill a tiger or a poisonous reptile, or anything else, in case of necessity. But, even then I should barely enjoy it. I know some animals are pests and have to be killed. Some men do, too. But I don't like to do it myself."

"Well," she laughed a little. He imagined that he could smell that wonderful hint of a subtle fragrance like that of sun-dried seaweed or the elusive scent that clings to a tuft of long-plucked heath. GENERAL SICKLES IN HISTORY

His Notable Career in War and in Diplomatic Service.

The late General Daniel E. Sickles was the last of that galaxy of corps commanders who made possible the achievement of Grant and brought the civil war to a triumphant close. Fighter, lawyer, politician and diplomat, his life was a crowded one.

At Chancellorsville, commanding the Third army corps, he was highly commended for gallant conduct, and courage and activity at Gettysburg are matters of history. All authorities accord him a very important part in that battle, some contending that he was the master strategist, saved the day. It was at Gettysburg that he lost a leg. In March, 1865, he was brevetted a major general of the regular army for bravery and meritorious service at Gettysburg. He was mustered out of the service Jan. 1, 1869, and was placed on the retired list with the full rank of major general April 14, 1869.

In the spring of 1869 President Grant appointed him United States minister to Spain, a post which he retained until March 30, 1873.

At the court of Spain Sickles became a dominating figure. Four years of brilliant diplomacy brought him the title, "The Yankee King of Spain."

While in Madrid he married the present Mrs. Sickles, who was Miss Caroline Creagh, daughter of a Spanish counselor of state. He was estranged from her for twenty-nine years until his last illness.

In 1859 General Sickles shot dead in Washington Philip Barton Key, son of the author of "The Star Spangled Banner." The trouble was over the fair Mrs. Sickles. Sickles had been Teresa Bagioli, beautiful daughter of Italian music teacher. His trial, which lasted twenty days, ended in acquittal, the defense pleading temporary aberration of mind. This was the first case in which that plea was set up as a defense. After his acquittal Sickles took his wife back.

OUR BIG FINANCIAL ADVANTAGE OVER MEXICO.

Large Amounts Available For Providing the Sinews of War.

Nowhere is the contrast between the comparative stability of this country and Mexico to go to war more striking than in the condition of their finances, says the New York Times. The Huerta government has short exhausted every possibility for raising any considerable sum of money. With the country devastated by internal struggles, the national railways operating only about half of its mileage and unable to pay interest coupons in cash, though guaranteed by the government, with bonds pledged for loans beyond the proceeds of which were long since exhausted, it is extremely unlikely that Mexico could finance anything but guerrilla operations.

The United States, on the other hand, could raise funds for any conceivable purpose, and, moreover, whatever sums were required to put a fully equipped and largely augmented army into the field for a long stay. The Spanish war showed with what facility the machinery of this government can be set to work to increase the revenue and to provide for big loans.

The war revenue act enacted in 1898 to help defray the cost of the war with Spain brought in a total of $380,000,000 in the four years that it was in operation. That avenue is of course open to us now. By means of changes in the income tax it would be possible to raise almost any sum likely to be decided upon. Neither of these measures would sid to the country's indebtedness and could be repealed when the war bills were paid. In addition to these sources, the government has now the right to offer $240,000,000 of Panama bonds and $200,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness. The present small working balance of the treasury imposes no limits on the government's ability to finance extraordinary war costs.

The net balance in the general fund of the treasury is now, roundly, $85,000,000. Of this sum about $52,000,000 is in national bank depositaries, leaving $33,000,000 in cash in treasury vaults of $31,000,000. But instead of treasury cash assets are approximately $293,000,000 subsidiary silver coin, fractional currency, minor coin and silver bullion. Strictly speaking, this sum must be regarded as unavailable for purposes of settlement. The free and available cash at the moment is therefore, roughly, $33,000,000.

Another way of increasing revenue for war purposes might be found in connection with the income tax, either in the direction of imposing greater burdens on those who are now paying the tax or by fixing the amount of income exempt from taxation at a lower figure than the $3,000 or $4,000 limit which now prevails.

CHAUTAUQUA SPECIAL FROM CHICAGO TO THE SEABOARD

CROWDS' GREETINGS GREATER THAN LAST YEAR

From Chicago to the Atlantic ocean in the Chautauqua Magnolia, Mr. and Mrs. Pound, through Southern battlefields and down to historic old Fort Sumter, was the joyfully the route of the second annual tour Margaret, P. bookers. Many stops were made and in every instance the enthusiasm was gratifying. Heralded by newspapers and handbills the population at each stop responded splendidly to the band concerts and other impromptu features.

The trainmen caught the Chautauqua spirit and joined in the fun. Dressed in buckaroos and sombreros, Chautauqua hats were in evidence. Down the line the red and green Hobbith souvenir cap made a big hit. Included in the party which left Chicago were the Lewis Quintet, Miss Margaret Pound, reader, Miss Dorothy Manager Harry P. Harrison and W. V. Harrison, W. H. Pound

The first night saw the special through the Central States. Breakfast was taken at Nashville, Tenn. An hour later a brief stop was made at Vulcan, near where the new city of Birmingham now stands, which was ushered in with the robust battle which made Birmingham famous in national history. The party caught a glimpse of the expansive burial ground where, after that bloody battle, 3811 known and 2324 unknown dead were laid to rest.

At the Birmingham station of the entire trip greeted the Redpath party at 9 o'clock. Then the train reached Birmingham the noon hour when the townspeople were all intent and when the train pulled out the band struck up a lively air and the entire Chautauqua party marched across the way to the hotel lawn, closely followed by an immense crowd of more than a thousand people.

A glimpse of the entire train.

From the hotel veranda Prof. Fitzgerald of the Tuskaloosa schools welcomed the Redpath delegation to this busy little city and a happy response was made by Harry P. Harrison. The Chautauqua choir sang a national medley and Kirk's band played to the delight of the impromptu audience a group of school boys sang "Dixie."

START NATIONAL SCHOOL OF THRIFT

Promoters' Aim Is Teaching People to Spend Less.

ASK SCHOOLS' CO-OPERATION

Purpose of These Behind Movement For Individual Conservation Is to Establish Chapters in Every Town and City—Action Gets Endorsement of Congress and Business Men.

Assured through a majority of the members of congress of enthusiastic and action wide support of its movement, the American Society For Thrift has announced through its Washington headquarters the beginning of a campaign to establish local chapters in every American town and city with a population of 2,000 or more. The movement will be extended later to the smallest villages.

In an effort to determine whether the organization, of which Simon W. Straus of Chicago is president, could rely on the cooperation of the public letters of inquiry were sent to members of congress, members of the state legislatures and leading business men of the country. The result was unanimous agreement with the doctrines of the organization and assurances of co-operation and hearty support.

Among the congressional letters of indorsement and commendation received were those from Senators Elihu Root of New York, Moses E. Clapp of Minnesota, Reed Smoot of Utah, John F. Shafroth of Colorado, John D. Works of California, Morris Sheppard of Texas, Albert B. Cummins of Iowa, William Saulsbury of Delaware and Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts and Representatives Burton L. French of Utah, A. P. Gardner of Massachusetts, Philip P. Campbell of Kansas and Steven E. Payne of New York.

To Teach Personal Economy.

The American Society for Thrift, which thus begins its career as a factor in national life, was organized by Simon W. Straus for the purpose of impressing on the individual the advantage of personal economy and of instructing the state and national lawmakers of the dangerous and unnecessary extravagance in the use of the public's money.

One of its fundamental principles is that the teaching of thrift is most beneficial and gets the best results when applied to children. For this reason it already has embarked on a policy of securing the co-operation of public schools and large charity organizations in interest boys and girls in gardening, savings schemes and in various undertakings for earning and using wisely small sums of money.

Its program includes also the distribution of literature for educational purposes and the giving of courses of lectures dealing with every phase of the subject. It is particularly interested in plans for better government and economical improvement of towns and cities. Broadly speaking, its ideal is to educate the public, beginning with the children, as to the absolute necessity for husbanding their resources.

A "Money Spending Mad" People.

Interesting in connection with the launching of the new society is the statement of Representative J. Hampton Moore of Pennsylvania. He says that Americans are "money spending mad" people.

"The diamonds, rings, gold chains and other articles of jewelry we bought for our sweethearts, wives and daughters during the last five years," Mr. Moore says, "foot up a total that is more than twice the sum spent by the United States to construct the Panama canal. We are spending more than $25,000,000 a year for chewing gum alone. Our national tobacco bill averaged approximately $350,000,000 last year."

These remarkable figures are a few of the reasons given by Representative Moore for the birth of living, a condition which he deplores as being unnecessary were the money to pay for it devoted to the ordinary demands for economy and reasonable habits of life.

Civic Federation Completes Plan For National Health Campaign.

The National Civic Federation through its health and drugs department has completed a plan for a national campaign for pure food and drugs. Inquiry will be made of health officials of 10,000 cities and towns, as well as of experts, reform and organizations working for a pure food and drug supply.

The federation purposes to formulate a model sanitary code for small towns and villages, on the theory that, whilst most cities have restrictive legislation, some have none and others a prescribed code. Vincent Astor is chairman of the committee.

THE LAW THAT GOES WITH OUR FLAG IN MEXICO.

Status of People in Territory Now Occupied by Our Troops.

Commenting upon the obligations of the United States toward the people of Vera Cruz and any other place which it may be right to occupy pending a final settlement of the Mexican problem Frederic R. Coudert of New York, the well known international law expert, said:

"Regarding the status of the people in the territory now occupied by the United States troops in Mexico, I would say that this is covered not only by the general rules of international law adopted and recognized by the United States, but is also specifically provided for by the military laws of the United States.

"The whole question of the legal status of the inhabitants of the territory occupied by the United States forces, but which had not been annexed to the United States, was very thoroughly considered and discussed in the cases arising out of the territories acquired and also territory occupied (but not acquired) during the Spanish war. The general rule is that political laws are suspended but that the ordinary municipal laws remain.

"During the occupation the inhabitants of such territory owe allegiance to such law as the occupying power may choose to enact. As a matter of fact, the military officers of the United States in occupying territory are bound by the military code and the instructions for armies in the field, which instructions are based upon Professor Lieber's instructions contained in general orders No. 100 and which were in force during the Civil war.

"The property of the inhabitants as far as consistent with military necessity and their personal liberty is to be respected. The ordinary municipal law, rules, and regulations are continued in force as far as they can be consistently with effective control. The local authorities are usually continued in the exercise of their ordinary functions, but this must be done with the permission of the officer in command.

"Such territory is directly subject to the orders of the president of the United States as chief executive.

"The government in Cuba for years was a military government of the United States directed from Washington, and such was the government carried on in the Philippines until congress enacted there a local government independent of the military government."

U. S. CONSUL IS HELD

SECRETARY OF STATE DEMANDS THAT DICTATOR FREE BILLIMAN.

PEACE ENVOYS REJECT AID

U. S. Admiral Offers Dictator's Commissioners Courtesies, but They Want No Help—Still for Niagara Falls.

Mexico City, May 12.—Acting Foreign Secretary Esteva Ruiz announced Monday that at the request of the British minister, the Mexican government has agreed to release United States Consul Silliman at Guaymas who has been brought to the capital and will place him at the disposal of the British legation, which must produce that he shall leave Mexico.

Washington, May 13.—A demand for the immediate release of John R. Silliman, United States vice-consul at Guaymas, held by Mexican federals at Mazatlan, was made Monday by Secretary Lansing of the three South American envoys engaged in mediation efforts between this country and President Huerta. Several hours later, while there appeared to be a central attitude on the part of the reported secretaries of Lobos island by the American navy, there came an explanation of the incident from Admiral Mayo.

The first official word of the landing of American sailors on Lobos island reached the navy department Saturday when a wireless dispatch from Mexican keepers deserted the island that the sailors had landed at the request of the Mexican keepers because of a severer tender Dixie was "unmanageable for the benefit of navigation."

Lobos island has not been occupied," said Admiral Mayo's report. "The men and some supplies were ashored there, and other vessels have called there for a refuge. The men are at Lobos island fight deserted it and the Dixie is now maintaining it for the benefit of navigation."

Prior to the receipt of Admiral Mayo's report Secretary Bryan called at the Argentine legation and passed two hours in conference. The mediators discussed the continued detention of Consul Silliman, the present status of Lobos island, the American torpedo boats and the care of the South American consular agent at Vera Cruz for firing upon United States sailors and marines.

Mr. Bryan insisted that the release of Silliman must be brought about at Washington.

While the delegates appointed by General Huerta were preparing to leave Vera Cruz on the way to the mediation conference at Niagara Falls, Canada, the United States government officially announced its representative in the coming negotiations. Justice J. R. Lamar of the United States supreme court, and President Wilson's personal representative, Frank Nelson, former minister to Argentina, were chosen by President Wilson as the American representatives.

Little further is expected to the preliminary peace negotiations until after the Canada.

Washington, May 12.—Further advices of an alarming character regarding anarchy and looting in Mexico City have been received by diplomats here from the representatives of their governments in the national capital. These advices were laid before Secretary Bryan.

According to the information at hand there are 3,000 Zapatistas in the city at the disposal of Huerta for the protection of his capital.

They are reported to be no longer loyal to their chief. According to the cable dispatches they are on the eve of a revolt and will refuse to obey the orders of the Mexican dictator. Zapata or Villa makes an assault upon the city. They are not expected to make any effort to hold the city, but they will be in a position to take advantage of a change in the situation.

The foreign legation and all foreigners in the city will be in grave danger if this anarchistic condition is allowed to prevail.

New York, May 12.—William J. Whilen, correspondent of the Associated Press, who was arraigned by Mexican authorities on his arrival in Mexico City Thursday and released Saturday, arrived in New York.

A. J. Sutton, Washington newspaper correspondent, who was arrested and released at the same time, was taken off the train at Cordoba on his way from the capital to the city.

On board the United States Pacific cruiser, the Milwaukee, by Wireless to San Diego, Cal., May 12.—Deserted foot and dogging before every rebel advance, many of the federals in Manzanillo were cut off from escape and either surrendered or were killed. A few escaped on board the federal transport Morelos, which was chased by the rebels. With abragaal bursting over it the Morelos ran for the outer harbor. The assaulting forces carried all before them in their advances on the city. They weak about the federal gunboat Morelos, which was abandoned in the harbor, and set fire to the vessel. The smoke belching from the hull was rent by an explosion when the powder in the magazines was reached by the flames. Spectators on shore say the gunboat burned like fine pearl way out of the water and sink.

Vera Cruz, May 12.—From Mexico City come later reports that bread numbers of men and boys are drifting in the streets. A few nights ago a mob gathered before the Brazilian legation and demanded that Luis d'Antin, attache of the American embassy, who had taken refuge there, be delivered over. Threats were made to kill him.

The Brazilian minister notified the state department that he would surrender d'Antin only in case he was overpowered by the mob.

The antipathy to the attache was due to the fact that he is the only American official left in the capital, and because of his activity in relief for the distress of American noncombatants.

So far as known no measures have been taken to fortify the capital. At Guadalupe, a strategic point on the Mexican railway entering the city, there are no signs of fortifications. The federals, however, are taking steps to provision Puebla, about halfway between Vera Cruz and the capital, in the following manner:

General Navarrete is said to be holding the principal seat of Puebla watching the American lines. It is reported that many cattle have been gathered at Puebla and much grain and quantities of various sorts are stored there.

A rumor has been current in the capital that if Villa drives back the federals out Huerta plans to make a stand at Puebla, which has military advantages.

An American consul, Doster, formerly a correspondent for a New York paper, but recently employed in Mexico, is in the capital, is minding and is supposed to have been imprisoned by the federals. He reported from Mexico City that the other correspondents at Mexico City went to Vera Cruz.

The number of American women left in the capital is naturally exaggerated up to three hundred. They are waiting for what the minister calls "the last indefinite warning." They appear to believe that the capture of the capital by the rebels would mean nothing worse than fighting within the city. They believe, also, they would be safe.

Nutter, correspondent of the Boston Herald, who went with a photographer to Saltillo recently on General Huerta's invitation, reached Vera Cruz during the day. Both men had a terrible experience at San Pedro and elsewhere after the rout of the federals at Torreon. They were repeatedly thrown into jail, lost all their possessions and were subjected to many indignities before they reached Vera Cruz on the way to Vera Cruz.

Vera Cruz, May 12.—The rebels have taken Tampico, according to a report received here, and the foreigners who had remained at Tampico are seeking refuge on the ships in the harbor as fast as they can be taken off.

As soon as the report was received here the British warship Essex, flagship of Vice-Admiral Cradock, began preparations to ferry to Tampico the British and foreigners who fled from the rebels followed furious fighting. It was said, in which the federal forces were completely defeated.

Tampico is a city of 15,000 inhabitants and is the chief seaport of Mexico.

Washington, May 12.—Dispatches from all over southern Wisconsin tell of the spring blossoms and the birds. It was cyclonic in violence, and though telegraph and telephone lines are down in many sections, indications are that the property loss has been more than $1,000,000, and that in less than four are dead, with a dozen injured as a result of the cyclone. The dead, as far as known, are as follows:

At Verona—Mrs. Lena Olson of Madison, an employee of the Kroger dairy farm laundry, which was destroyed.

At Westport—William Post, farmer; struck by lightning.

At Oregon—Lavinah Fredrickson, aged four years; killed by lightning while playing in a barn.

In the vicinity of Stoughton the cyclone was three miles wide. Twenty-five cars of freight had been demolished by General Villa's troops and Colonel Carranza's forces met in the revolutionaries army, said have established himself at Chapultepec.

Vera Cruz, May 12.—Private Samuel Parks of the Twenty-eighth infantry regiment was put to death while wearing the uniform of a private in the United States army by a firing squad within General Maas' lines on May 7.

LABOR MEN VICTORS

U. S. COURT SETS ASIDE SENTENCES AGAINST GOMPERS, MITCHELL AND MORRISON.

DECISION ENDS NOTED CASE

Justice Holmes Upholds Contention of the Defense—Statute of Limitations Intervenes and Heads of Unions Escape Jail.

J. Washington, May 12.—Contempt sentences imposed by the District supreme court upon Samuel Gompers, John Mitchell and Frank Morrison, labor leaders, were set aside on Monday by the U. S. Supreme court for the second time, as barred by the statute of limitations. Justice Holmes said that contempts were not to be treated as conspiracies.

Gompers had been sentenced to 30 days in jail and Mitchell and Morrison had been fined $500 each.

The decision of the high court means that the last chapter has been written in the famous labor case and that Gompers and his colleagues will never suffer any criminal punishment for their alleged disobedience of the injunction issued by Judge Wright of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, aimed at the publication in the American Federationist of the so-called "unfair list."

Justice Holmes read the opinion of the court. He explained that the proceedings in the district court against the labor leaders were "a punishment solely for past acts, not for prevention of acts in the future."

The decision turned on the plea of the statute of limitations, which had been urged by the labor leaders as a bar to their prosecution by the committee of prosecutors appointed by Judge Wright. They claimed that they could not be prosecuted for acts committed three years prior to the time when they were last prosecuted in the District courts.

Justice Holmes was inclined to take a broad view of the statute of limitations and declared that it did not make any difference whether the case against the labor leaders were "a judgment or some other proceeding, the statute of limitations applied just the same.

The action of the high court, according to officials of the department of justice, means that nothing more will be done in the case. It will be allowed to go quietly.

HUERTA'S FALL NEAR

DICTATOR'S HEAD PUT UNDER AX BY THE A.-B.-C. MEDIATORS.

PLEASES WILSON AND AIDS

Envoys Plan Provisional Government of Federals and Constitutionalists—See Peace in Mexico.

Washington, May 14.—The A-B-C mediators have worked out a scheme to be submitted to the representatives of the United States and Mexico at the peace conference to be held next week at Niagara Falls, Canada. This provides for the elimination of Huerta and the setting up of a provisional government, containing representatives of both rebels and federals in Mexico.

Although this plan would eliminate Huerta, and the constitutionalists would be represented in the new government, the scheme will not be acceptable to the constitutionalists, who Carranza's representatives in Washington.

It was learned that the proposal might be that the setting up of a temporary government be undertaken by a commission composed of five persons, two of them to be named by Huerta, two by the constitutionalists and the fifth by the mediators.

While the mediators have withdrawn their invitation to the constitutionalists to send delegates to the peace conference, it is generally believed that information is being sought as to whether the constitutionalists would consent, in case of the elimination of Huerta, to some form of temporary government in which he would be represented.

It became known that President Wilson's sanction for the war dispatch of warships and a part of the army of occupation, officials should be "only thing that could be construed as occupation of Lobos island," said the dispatch from the admiral, "was that the lighthouse-keeper, when leaving the light, was prevented from taking away with him certain essential parts of light machinery, and for the personal protection of the lighthouse keeper he was given by the commanding officer of the Fanning a certificate that the island was taken by force.

News came during the day that Vice-Consul Silliman's release at Guaymas had been ordered by Huerta. This relieved one tense situation, but the mediators intervened in the case of five South Americans held at Vera Cruz for "aiding" American troops and Secretary Bryan. The right of mediators to present Huerta's demand that the five be freed on the ground that they were arrested on Mexican territory was questioned by Mr. Bryan, who thought it might involve recognition of Huerta's government. He told the mediators he would take the matter before acting in the case.

Washington, May 14.—Nelson Oswaunchway, charge d'affaires of the Chilean government at Mexico City, told President Wilson on Tuesday the story of the Tampico incident in the beautiful capital during the days immediately preceding the rebel capture of Vera Cruz and gave him an intimate picture of General Huerta. The chargé called in the presidential yacht General Huerta was a very stubborn man and not an unpleasant one in his position as dictator easily. He expressed the opinion, however, that any government he might decide which has the support of the United States would stand. It is understood that Mr. Oshaunchway's account of General Huerta was such as to strengthen if possible, the president's determination to force the elimination of the Mexican dictator.

"General Huerta knew nothing about the Tampico incident," he said, "until I took it up with him."

Confirmation of the incident by cold, straightforward artillery, which was received at 9 a. m. on Monday, still was lacking at 4 p. m. Mr. Oshaunchway, according to a wireless report from naval headquarters, limited to the navy department by Rear Admiral Badger, German and Dutch citizens who had been in the rebel stronghold during the day.

NEW WAY OF LOOKING AT IT

Possibly Many of Us May Find Food for Reflection in Remark Made by Reverend Gentleman.

Perry S. Ruttis, railroad passenger agent, addressing the noonbathing at the Traffic club dinner in Kansas City a few nights ago about the way the government pays the railroads for hauling the mails.

"I was a sweet, curly-haired child," he said. "I guess I had a sweet voice, too, for I sang in the choir of the Chestnut Hill Episcopalian church in Philadelphia. The rector, the Rev. J. Andrews Harris, always took the choir boys for a walk each Saturday, a privilege we greatly esteemed. On this particular Saturday my sons was out of joint because some one had been chosen to sing a solo the next day, and I was voicing my indignation.

"'As I understand it, your position is that you didn't get what you deserved,' said the rector.

"'Exactly!' I replied.

And Now The Colonel

The Colonel has returned from the jungles to again lead the progressive host to democrat victory.

He is not backward (the Colonel is never backward,) in expressing his opinion of the Wilsonian policies. He is bitter concerning the Mexican trouble, because of the desire of his heart for another San Juan hill; but he is vitreous in his denunciation of the Panama $25,000,000 business, and he—

Well the Colonel is again a conspicuous figure in American politics, and he will proceed to promote the political interests of the former president of Princeton.

THREE A'S IS FOR TOWN ROADS.

"The A. A. A. is for a comprehensive development—not which shall furnish the feeder roads from the market towns to the farms, but which shall, when completed, all of the organization, the other city—"We are not seeking to get through roads to the detriment of the town interests. But we do not believe that the town interests that should receive road assistance from the central government."

CONVICT LABOR ON ROADS.

Plan of Working Prisoners Is Proving Successful In Several States.

The plan of working convict labor on the roads, which was given a trial on a small scale in little de Lest Fall, proved so successful that more treated in matter of the state penitentiary will be used on the roads this spring and summer. There are 250 prisoners in the Joliet prison who are to be used on the roads. Arrangements have been made whereby the prisoners working half will pay 50 cents each for the use of the men, but none will be sent to work on less than five miles of road. It is planned to divide the men into gangs of fifty each, so that five companies may be served at once. The state expects to furnish the work for maximum roads provided the counties pay the freight on it from Joliet to the nearest railway point.

Texas has decided to try the use of convict labor on the public roads with out guards or chaplain. Governor Colquitt has made a contract, whereby fifty convicts were sent to Smith county in twenty-mule Texas, to work the roads radiating from Lindale in what is known as road district No. 1, which recently issued $75,000 of bonds.

Liberal opportunities to permit the employment of convicts on the highways of New York state are recommended by the state commission, of which is in its annual report to the legislature. More than 600 convicts were employed at various times during the past summer and fall by order of the commissioner of state roads with gratifying results, both from the viewpoint of the state and the convicts. Humanitarian the commission states.

Following the resolutions adopted by the state automobile association at Portland, plans are being mapped out whereby Maine will adopt the convict system of road labor now used by a number of other states. It is felt that this would save the state much money, give the prisoners outdoor labor and increase the speed of road building.

GOOD ROADS DAY.

City, town are to be asked to contribute with city and county to the betterment of highways all over the state of Washington this year when the third good roads day is observed, probably May 22 or 24, the exact date not yet having been named. Governor Lister has approved the proposal of the Washington State Good Roads association that he issue a proclamation setting aside a good roads day, and the association is already at work upon plans to make it the most effective one yet held.

Under the leadership of the Washington State Good Roads association the plan is to effect a state wide organization reaching every hamlet and school district, as well as the larger cities. The various good roads associations, commercial clubs, chambers of commerce and automobile clubs will be called upon to take the initiative. While it is realized that it will be impossible to get all the city folk out on this day, it is hoped that they will observe the occasion of clean up day in their neighborhood.

Dr. King's New Life Pills keep stomach, liver and kidneys in healthy condition. Rid the body of poisons and waste. Improve your complexion by ridding the liver and kidneys. "OZARK SCENIC CIRCLE."

Missourians Propose an 800 Mile Automobile Highway.

Missourians are planning to build an automobile highway 800 miles long, which is to be known as "The Ozark scenic circle." It will begin at St. Louis and run southwest to Arcadia, where it will lead through the Ozark mountains, somewhat from the hills at Springfield. From this point the route will run to Sedalia, thence to St. Louis. There will be no time-taking, which will be approximately 800 miles long.

Along these roads are thousands of places for every conceivable sort of outing pleasure—camping, bathing, fishing, hunting and mountain climbing. Persons living along the proposed route say it is destined to become as popular as the Catskills or the mountains of Virginia. The Ozarks offer as grand views as the Rocky mountains without their rugged space. The lone hills stretch out into long distances, with rivers flowing between, full of bass, perch and other fish. The deer still wander in the forest, and wild turkey, quail and other feathered game abound.

TO ENLIST 50,000 VETERANS.

Nation Wide Appeal to Men Who Served in Spanish-American War.

In anticipation of general hostilities between this country and Mexico and to make good the offer of General John Lewis Smith, commander in chief of the United Spanish War Veterans, to furnish 50,000 trained soldiers, veterans of the Spanish war, two recruiting stations have been opened for this class of enlistment at the national headquarters of the organization in Washington.

The recruiting station at the national headquarters is under the direction of Adjutant General Rausch, while the station at the national headquarters will be directed by Departmental Commander J. A. Coughlin.

The opening of the two stations in Washington is a part of a general scheme covered by a general order of Commander in Chief Smith for every city in the country where there is a veterans' camp. General Smith is confident he can enlist the 50,000 men of his organization within a week.

Fish For National Parks.

Following out his plan to increase the supply of food fishes, Secretary Redfield of the department of commerce has proposed to the secretary of the interior that the two department joint operate in the stocking of lakes and streams in the national parks with fish and in maintaining the fish supply in those waters by the systematic planting of young fish and the adoption of national regulations adapted to the local conditions. Secretary Redfield is desirous of putting the plan in force immediately.

This is reported as a lull season, and bulletins explaining the situation have been distributed among the men. It has been stated that the single men will go first but that efforts will be so conducted as to work no hardship to anyone. The men are told to get other employment if possible but that if inside of thirty days they have not been succeeded to report to the company and an effort will be made in their behalf. The will of course only affects one shop of the men at the city.

A War Scene That Was Not a Battle Scene

In the latter part of 1861 our regiment was among those that were pursuing Price's army on its last raid thru Missouri. The pursuit was energetic in the extreme and the marches only limited by the endurance of man and horse—night and day were the same, the force and movement only interrupted by a very short rest or the obstruction for a brief time by a stand made by the hard pressed enemy.

We were passing through the western part of Arkansas, the weather had been quite warm and dry, we had been on the march all day and it was near midnight, when our regiment passed over an elevation from which, before us the line of the advance battalions could be readily traced by the dust that rose a hundred feet or more above the moving columns. We were passing over a winding road through scattering timber and the serpentine line of dust with protruding patches of timber, as viewed in the pale moonlight presented a weird and ghostly appearance.

Just then a northerly breeze stirred the line of dust and it required no great stretch of fancy to picture in the air an exagerated counterpart of the scene below. There were represented in the pantomime infantry, cavalry, artillery and even the signal corps and bannerr galore seemed to take on a most remarkable exhibit. All were hastening to the front, and then an exagerated horseman suddenly rose from the mass and drawing a flashing sword, dashed forward, seemed to beckon and accelerate the earthy column to a more speedy advance; to complete the illusion, just then, for about a forty of soldiers, as were their wont on the long marches struck up on the old song of those days:

Oh, we're marching through Georgia
Hurrah! Hurrah!
We bring the jubilee
Hurrah! Hurrah!
The flags that shout the news
And the people sing the chorus
Hurrah! Hurrah!
But the best news news of all
Hurrah! Hurrah!
Glory! Glory! Hallelujah, Glory, glory
Hallelujah!
Glory! Glory! Glory Hallelujah, Hurrah! Hurrah! Hurrah!

Murray, Wm. Hampton and Delbert Wyers of the 7th. Orlando Wood, Kenneth Usher, Russell Sweetzer, Lee Young and Sam King of the 8th.

The highest individual score was made by Dick Hammett with 278 points for four events, and second highest Seeley Pierce with 265 points.

The grade scores were as follows: 5th, 317; 6th, 317; 7th 349 Washington School, 314; 8th Central, 181.1; 8th Central, 161.8.

Practically every boy and girl of the County Y. M. C. A. in planning and developing this form of athletic contests. Their value is in the fact that they involve all.

The sugar school contest for the three high schools of the county begins will be held in East Jordan, Friday May 29th. Every one should go.

Rt. Rev. Bishop McCormick will officiate at the Episcopal church Sunday afternoon. The hour will be announced at the morning service.

The funeral of Charles Russell, who was killed in Chicago last week was from the home, in Hayes, Sunday afternoon, interment at Brookside.

Chas. Roe's Harbor Springs steam pile driver is here building a 65 foot extension to the Coal and Wood Co. dock, on the south side of the harbor.

Capt. James Sanford, of the steamer H. M. Stephenson, brought his family last week, and is settled in the new residence on the south terrace. Capt. Sanford and family are now permanent residents of Charlevoix.

Cadet Hubert Paddock, United States navy, writes his parents that he is booked for the battle ship Idaho on a cruise to England and the Mediterranean, via Gibralter. The cruise will take in the principal Italian cities.

W. A. Garrett, chief executive officer of the Pere Marquette Railroad, has rented a cottage on the Belvedere grounds, and will occupy it with his family within the next week. Mr. Garrett knows a good thing when he sees it.

Lawrence Moech, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Moech, of East Jordan, died at the home of the family last Wednesday, aged 22 years, of tuberculosis. The deceased attended East Jordan Friday, interment at Brookside cemetery, this city.

A very graceful thing was done by the veterans on Memorial day. At the request of the aged Mrs. John Jolliff the procession to the cemetery was deflected from the usual route to pass her home, where she sat on the porch unable to participate in the ceremonies as she had done many times.

Capt. John Nordtrum, who has been fishing out of Gloucester, Mass., for several years, is back in Charlevoix again, and has taken command of the tug G. C. Geiken for the season. In the fall he will return to Gloucester for winter fishing, and will remove his wife and his salt water outfit and return to Charlevoix for good.

Archie Livingston, of the State Savings Bank, is liable to make a statistic for a few days, if everything goes well, and you better watch him. He has a fine boy up at his home, and everything is doing well. An interesting feature of the case is that Mr. Geo. D. Ash and Mr. Chas. S. Smith, grandfather and great grandfather, of Bellaire, came down Tuesday to see the kid.

The new fishing tug "A and M. Link" built by Silas Swallee for Frank Lafferty, Jesse Lewis and Joseph Link, and her boiler and engine have been placed. When this boat goes into commission she will be one of the best of the fishing tugs of the lakes. Her hull is built of the best material that could be found, and her boiler and engine, built at Ferrysburg, are first class. Her construction is probably as perfect as that of any boat built at the big shipyards, and is a credit to her builder. The line men who will man her possess every quality that is required for a heavy weather craft. She will go into into commission about June 15th.

For obvious reasons the whole truth was not told of the tragic death of Chas. Russel, in Chicago last week. Russel was a foreman for a large contracting concern, and was sent to the Continental Bank building to investigate something in the top story. The door was not lighted, and it is supposed that in making his way through the gloom he dropped into the ventilating shaft and fell twenty-four stories, or about 336 feet. It was found necessary to call in the fire department to recover the body. His death was a great shock to his aged mother, who is in quite feeble health. Mr. Ferguson desires us to extend their grateful thanks to the many friends who so kindly expressed their sympathy and in many ways attended most tender ministration.

LAST OF DAVID WARD ESTATE

First Holdings of Mammoth Estate Will be Sold Within a Few Months

In a few months the last timber land holdings of the great D. Ward estate will be sold at public auction at Bay City. The sale is set for August 4th. The estate yet owns about 40,000 acres of land lying chiefly in the counties of Kalkaska, Otsego, Antrim and Crawford. Millions in value have already been divided among the heirs, and when this sale is completed the estate will be rung down on one of those clear-cut instances of great gains from the monopoly of natural opportunities.

In his youth, during the days of the Civil War, and after, David Ward was a "land-owner." He owned the Michigan woods "locating" sections of land in which the growth first of pine and afterwards hardwood was found accessible. Then he would go to the proper land office and claim ownership at $1.25 per acre.

Afterward lumbermen went to work and the cut logs were skidded down some stream or shipped by rail to the mills. Those who did the cutting often were not concerned whether their operations were all confined to their own land, but if the prospects were good they also cut on the adjoining government land. Occasionally, too, they not only cut their own and government land, but they shipped over into the nearby territory of rival corporations.

So little did these owners of these tree-covered areas think of the actual soil, that after the land had been denuded of timber, they declined to pay the taxes on it; and h.i thousands of acres revert back to the state.

David Ward was a many-time millionaire; David Ward's heirs were all millionaires. Some of them having wasted their wealth from the unearned increment, but the people of Michigan are the ones who furnished these millions and for many years they will continue to pay toll to the foresight of David Ward and the statutes that allow the monopoly of such a rich opportunity for labor and wealth as nature-given forests.

A Matter of Business

This paper has on its books a large number of unpaid accounts of long standing. Unless paid within a reasonable time these accounts will be placed in process of collection. We know what this means; we know that lawyer fees are augmented, and hard things said of the printer; but the printer's account is just as legitimate as that of the grocer or the butcher. A newspaper cannot be published without money. There is a large amount due this paper, and we propose to get it, in justice to ourselves and our family and creditors. A word to the wise is sufficient.

THE MAYOR IS HONORED

VETERANS NAME ANNUAL CAMP FOR HIM

Best Meeting in History of Organization is Looked For by Those in Charge

The final arrangements have been made for the annual encampment of the Grand Traverse Soldiers' and Sailors' association to be held in Traverse City, commencing Tuesday, June 9, and lasting until Friday afternoon, June 12th. It will be known as Camp Straub, in honor of Mayor John G. Straub of Traverse City. All the meetings will be on the fair grounds, the use of which has been kindly donated by the supervisors of Grand Traverse county. One big exhibition building will be used for sleeping quarters and another for dining room and audience room. Those who drive can find accommodation for their horses in the horse barn and cattle shed. All the buildings and grounds are lighted with electricity.

The speeches and entertainments will be given on the baseball grounds with ample seating room in the grandstand and bleachers. The big feature of the final day will be the sham battle between the Spanish War Veterans and the Navy Reserves. The last scene will take place directly in front of the grandstand. Over two thousand rounds of ammunition will be used.

Arrangements have been made to have an auto truck carry all baggage to the depots and transport them to the fair grounds. During the encampment all delegates wearing the official badge will be carried back and forth free. Bring blankets and pillows, everything else will be furnished by the association. All delegates should register in the official roster immediately on arrival so that friends may locate them and they will receive the official badge and three meal tickets for 25 cents, regular fare. Meals will be served on the grounds at 15 cents each.

Company M will have headquarters and entertain all Cuban and Philippine soldiers. The Naval Reserves will care for all sailors who have served under the Stars and Stripes.

This association covers twenty-three counties, and it is expected that this will be the largest encampment ever held in this region.

JOHNSTON RELEASED BY COURT

Justice Court Had No Authority to Sentence Man

Joel Johnston sentenced by a Boyne City justice to serve ninety days at Charlevoix under the Michigan Pure Food Law, was discharged Friday last, his time not yet out. It seems the offense was out of the power of the justice court, all said court being empowered to do was to bind him over to circuit court. Attorney Clink instituted habeas corpus proceedings as soon as circuit court was convened and secured his release.

When the case came up Inspector Mickle, of the State Pure Food and Dairy Department asked Prosecuting Attorney Finch to allow him to handle the case, representing that he was a lawyer and familiar with the proceedings. As he was a representative of the state and qualified to do so Fitch acquiesced. He secured him of his willingness of be of assistance if needed and left the matter with Mickle. When sentence was passed Fitch knew it was void but there was nothing to do until circuit court was called. He wrote to the Attorney General regarding the case and his opinion is now on file at the Prosecutor's office. It sets forth the same as held by the court.

As Johnston has served all but three weeks of the sentence nothing more will be done about the case in all probability. Had Mickle consulted Fitch the case would have gone to circuit court.

Nasty Grub on Warpath

From time to time there appears a small grubbie creature that feeds on clover a greenish, soft-bodied grub, the immature form of the cloverleaf beetle. It feeds mainly at night, on red clover, alsyke, alfalfa, and sometimes on white clover and mammoth clover. Fortunately says the bulletin of the Michigan Agricultural college, "nature has provided an agent which is likely to appear during excessive outbreaks of the pest, in the form of a fungus disease which destroys the grub, and impelling the dying insect to crawl up to the top of a grass spear and curl its body around the point. Here the grub died and its body remains clinging there afterward until washed off by the rains.

"Unfortunately the dead bodies of the grubs are poisonous to stock, usually not sufficiently poisonous to produce death, but often toxic enough to produce serious illness. It is therefore suggested that during the present outbreak of the grubs stock be restricted from feeding on grass bearing such dead grubs after the clover seed has washed off their bodies and again made the forage safe

County Normal Notes

(VILMA LA CONNEY)

The annual school picnic was held Tuesday by the junior class, normal and the normal class.

Miss Reta Carr of '11 visited the Normal Wednesday, and Miss Munger of '12 visited the Normal Friday.

Most of the school garden has been enclosed by a woven wire fence. This was a much needed improvement.

In the corn testing done by the normal class last week the selected corn averaged 70 per cent germination, and the unselected corn averaged 50 per cent germination.

About twenty-five of the alumni attended the reception given last Friday evening. A short business session was held at which Miss Grace Meggison was elected president, and Miss Anna Metcalf secretary and treasurer of the Alumni. The vice-president will be elected later.

The County Normal Class Day program will be given Wednesday evening, June 3, and the Commencement program Thursday evening, June 4. Both programs will begin at eight o'clock in the morning. Commencement week will be the Methodist church. Miss Estelle Dunning of the National State Normal College will give an address. Miss Dunning is said to be an exceptionally strong speaker. Everybody is invited to attend.

Memorial Day

All nature contributed generously to the success of Memorial day observances. The weather was glorious and the verdure had burst into its summer fullness, as if in sympathy with the tender sentiment that gave birth to the day.

Everybody was out, the country round-about being largely represented. Flowers and greenery abounded, and many a tender tribute was laid with loving hands upon the graves of the departed.

The veterans were few, very few, the small detachment telling its sad story of the inroads of the grim reaper upon the ranks of that intrepid band the Grand Army of the Republic.

The program, as published in this paper last week, was carried out successfully.

Another Horrible Catastrophe

On Thursday last, outward bound from Quebec for Liverpool, the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Ireland was rammed by a Collier and sunk in twenty minutes, carrying 1,000 people to the bottom with her.

The steamship was lying too in a fine fog, at the mouth of the St. Lawrence when the collision occurred. About 200 were picked up by the boats, many of them badly injured.

Central Lake Torch: J. Fred Fisk, the jovial proprietor of Fisk's Lodge, that well known Bear River resort, and inclined sportsman, was in town Monday. Mr. Fisk is in the midst of his spring improvements. Always about this time of year he rolls up his sleeves, casts his eyes about for a good place to start, and proceeds to clear up the underbrush from fifteen or twenty acres of his lake shore property, making room for the ever increasing contingent of campers that visit him as often as summer comes around. Besides this, he is refurnishing his bungalows, building an addition on the lodge, and has taken on quite a number of male help. Which, taken altogether, should furnish enough to keep him busy the entire spring.

Harbor Springs Republican: A deal which has been pending for some time was closed recently and as a result Geo. H. Babcock, who for many years has had charge of the Babcock "Floral Co's greenhouse at Wequetonsing, has purchased a similar establishment at Charlevoix. Mr. Babcock and family left Saturday for their new home. The business at Charlevoix, which thus changes ownership, is a good plant and has a well established trade. It goes without saying that the new owner will keep the business up to the present standard and doubtless improve upon it, as he is an expert in this line. The many friends of the family in Harbor Springs and Wequetonsing will team possible success in the enterprise they have undertaken in the new field.

One hundred farmers' sons will be welcomed by the state Y. M. C. A. for a ten days' camp at the Torch Lake outing place maintained by the Y. M. C. A. in connection with the agreement of the Michigan Agricultural college and the state Y. M. C. A. committee is making arrangements, the date being August 19th to 29th. This will be the first camp especially for farmers' sons in the United States, so far as known. L. Rose, of Jackson, state chairman of county Y. M. C. A. work, will be chairman of the local committee. To be eligible for the camp each lad must have earned at least half the money by work on a farm. During the ten days there will be a few lectures on farm and home life, but special attention will be given to training of leaders to improve moral and social conditions among boys on Michigan farms. All kinds of recreative features, swimming, boating, [illegible] will be on the daily program. J. A. Van Dis of the Detroit Y. M

HUERTA MAY QUIT

DICTATOR REPORTED TO HAVE INSTRUCTED ENVOYS TO OFFER ABDICATION.

ASKS LARGE LOAN IN RETURN

Demands Carranza Be Barred From Presidency; That He Help Name New Ruler; That U. S. Loan Mexico $500,000,000.—Former Aid Flees.

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 20.—Gen. Victoriano Huerta is said to have intrusted to his mediation delegates that he would resign the presidency of the Mexican republic on the following four conditions:

1. That General Carranza be forever barred from ascending to the presidential chair.

2. That Huerta may have a choice in naming the new ruler of the republic.

3. That the United States make an immediate loan of between three hundred and fifty million and four hundred million dollars to the Mexican government.

4. That the United States government pay approximately $500,000,000 for the lease of Magdalena bay.

Washington, May 20.—Despite the many unofficial reports that Huerta is willing to resign on certain conditions, this government has received nothing to substantiate them, and, in fact, regards them with suspicion and is indicating that the Mexican dictator is trying to throw dust in the administration's eyes.

It is positively known that neither this government nor the mediators nor the Huerta representatives to the peace parley at Niagara Falls have received anything from Huerta indicating his intention of submitting any proposals which include his resignation.

It is definitely known also that the administration believes Huerta will not resign, and that no such circumstances which will be accepted by the United States.

Dr. Aurelano Urrutia, who was once Huerta's most trusted counselor in the cabinet, and who as minister of the interior is popularly believed to have been the author of many outrages for the disappearance of the country's political enemies, arrived here on Sunday aboard the steamship Ipiranga from Vera Cruz.

He had fled from the wrath of Huerta.

Doctor Urrutia said he had not been subjected to any overt act of hostility by Huerta, but had decided that to remain within reach of the provisional president was the greatest risk he had been conceived of this by the testimony of friends and by the fear of his soul had seen. He declared he preferred to enter the American lines and trust to the hospitality of the American authorities in Vera Cruz. He was accompanied by his family and said he expected to remain here indefinitely.

The former minister of the interior declared he had stolen away from the capital in the guise of one of a band of fugitives. He had succeeded in eluding General Huerta's agents and arrived within the American lines without his identity being disclosed so far as he knew.

Vera Cruz, May 19.—Activity of Mexican forces beyond the federal lines increased during Sunday. Refugees appeared within the American lines and declared that Mexican cavalry was approaching from the northeast. The refugees expressed the opinion that the Mexicans were preparing to attack the city.

Herr Everbusch, German consul at Tampico, was insulted by a rebel colonel, a member of General Caballero's staff, while attempting to arrange for the departure of 240 refugees aboard the Hamburg-American liner Yptanga. It is reported the capitals of the Mexican republic Sweden was prepared to land marines, if necessary, to obtain a release of the Germans.

Arrangements had been made at Tampico for departure of the refugees, but later the rebel officers ordered all the passengers off the vessel. Thereupon the consul with an officer of the cruiser Dresden, went to the Mexican headquarters.

"This low-bred German consul makes me tired," said one rebel colonel.

The consul protested, whereupon the rebel repeated the insult and reached for a weapon. General Caballero intervened and the departure of the ship was finally arranged after the refugees had been held all night.

It was believed the rebels wanted an excuse to seize the arms and ammunition aboard the Yptanga if there were not delivered to Huerta.

Washington, May 19.—President Huerta's elimination from power in Mexico through his own decision to resume the mediation conference in Niagara Falls was deemed a certainty after the delegates had explained that a attitude to personal friends and departed for New York on the way to the peace meeting, which will be opened Wednesday.

It became clear that the conference would deal not only with the "Tampico incident," but with the interior war of Mexico, and that the establishment of peace, with perhaps a constitutionalist in the provisional presidency, without neither Carranza nor Villa, would be the chief object of the conference.

The chief military development of Sunday was a report from General Funston that the San Francisco bridge on the interoceanic railroad, 25 miles from Vera Cruz, had been destroyed by Mexican federals.

General Funston reported rumors that General Navarette, Mexican commander, was in the vicinity of Vera Cruz with 3,000 men. Army officers seriously doubted, however, that Navarette had so many troops.

Although General Huerta has sent delegates to mediate differences and they know the situation, there is a possibility that hostilities may be provoked at any time by the federal troops near Vera Cruz, which may entangle the situation and force another crisis.

Developments affecting foreign interests are expected at Tampico. At the instance of Chevalier W. L. F. C. Van Rappard, minister of the Netherland, instructions were sent by the secretary of the navy to Rear Admiral May, at Tampico to forward full information in regard to a proposed disposal of the constitutionalists there for a "voluntary contribution" to the "constitutionalist" cause.

Former Head of New Haven Warned by Ex-President to Keep Within the Law—Explains West Chester Deal.

Washington, May 21.—More of the hidden secrets of the financial operations in connection with the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad were revealed here on Tuesday by Charles S. Mellen, when he took the stand in the interstate commerce commission's investigation. Mr. Mellen was formerly president of the New Haven. He was asked by Chairman Clark, "How long were you president of the Northern Pacific?" was the first question asked by Joseph W. Folk, chief counsel for the commission.

"Six years," answered Mr. Mellen.

"To whom did you owe your election to that office?"

"To Mr. Morgan. He selected me," Mellen replied.

"Were you proud of being Mr. Morgan's man in this post?"

"Yes, I was proud of having his confidence."

"Who dominated the board of directors of the New Haven?"

"Say, voted pretty much as Mr. Morgan did," is the recall of one in which he did not have his way.

"Testifying as to the purchase of the West Chester line, Mr. Mellen said that at a directors' meeting Mr. Morgan suggested the appointment of a committee to undertake the acquisition of the road. He said he resign or quit the political leaders and set in touch with the situation again after his long absence from the United States. He left for his home at Oyster Bay, and will return about the middle of June to begin strenuous work, but not were to will go to Washington and tell him what to do and to do it."

The government opposed retrial of Richard H. Houlihan of Chicago, William Bernhardt of Cincinnati and Olaf Vestinne of San Francisco, who will probably learn this week whether they will be granted new trials. This will depend upon the decision based upon the oral arguments.

The government offered no opposition to the retrials ordered for William J. McKay of Kansas City, James E. Ray of Peoria and Fred Sherman of Indianapolis. No date has been set for the hearings.

Sentences of from one to seven years must be served by the 39 who will go to prison in June. They were convicted of conspiracy to transport dynamite on passenger trains in 1910 and 1911. Involved in the case was the wrecking of the Los Angeles Times building.

When the men affected by the mandate reach the federal prison there will be 24 from workers in that penitentiary.

Outrages at Juarez.

When Chedad Juarez was taken from the federals in May, 1911, he killed Senor Ignacio Gomez Oyola, a man of over sixty years of age, under the following circumstances: Having sent for him, Villa asked whether he had any arms in his house, and on being answered in the negative, he ordered two of his men to search the house and bring him one. After rifling the corpse of money and valuables it was thrown into the street.

After the triumph of the revolution, Villa, in November, 1911, conferred a monopoly from the then governor of Chihuahua for the sale of meat in the city of Chihuahua, which he procured by stealing cattle from the neighboring farms. Suspecting one of his subordinates, Cristobal Juarez, of stealing on his own account, he killed him at night in the latter part of November in the Calle de la Libertad.

Another case, on May 1, 1913, Villa, with 76 men, assaulted a train at Bassa, state of Chihuahua, that was carrying bars of gold and silver valued at 100,000 pesos, killing the crew and passengers, including Messrs. Carvantes and a senor Issac Herrera, of Ciudad Guerrero.

Murders in Cold Blood.

Late in the same month he entered the town of San Andres, Chihuahua, and assaulted the house of Senor Babas Muren an hacienda, who with his two sons, tried to defend themselves. Two of his guests were killed, but the Murgen was away. Villa then got hold of two sons-in-law of Murgen, who had not taken any part in the fight, and after torturing them to say where their father-in-law had hidden his money he had them killed.

Towards the end of the month Villa came into the Spanish, Carranza, whom he is presumed to serve. His press bureau is far more active and his dash as a commander gives to him importance as a news maker, overshadowing for the time being the trail of murder, plunder and outrage which mark his field of operations.

Murder, plunder and outrage are Villa's specialties. He was reared that way, and increasing opportunities have made him a master hand in the business. To Americans he is more worth studying in connection with his published appeal to the United States to raise the embargo on war material and the certainty that his constitutionalist successes he will at once to it not actually in the presidential chair of Mexico.

Villa's Start in Life.

A biography of Villa compiled by the Pinkerton agency and read by Senator Lodge in the United States senate quotes Villa's boyhood:

Francisco Villa was born at Las Nieves in the state of Durango about the year 1866. He is wholly uneducated, being unable to read and barely able to sign his name. About the year 1893, when only fourteen years of age, he was seduced by a friend of virginicomment for cattle stealing. On his discovery he fled to the mountains camp of Guanacevi, where a few months later he underwent another sentence of imprisonment for horse code. When he came out of prison for the second time he organized a band of robbers, which had their headquarters in the mountainous region of "Chiquito" in the state of Durango, and were the terror of all that district.

In the year 1897 he was in partnership with one Pancho Rosa, stealing cattle in Durango and selling them in the United States, and then stealing mules and horses in the United States, and selling them in Durango. In consequence of some disagreement he shot and killed Pancho Rosa in broad daylight, sitting in the plaza in the City of Chihuahua. During the early part of the year 1910 he attacked the factory of a Mr. Soto, in Allende, state of Durango, and killed the owner. By threatening the latter's daughter he induced her to show where he had hidden a sum of $17,000, which he stole and used for arming a considerable force. In the fight which ensued, he was wounded, uniting his band with Urbino Orozco. In January, 1911, he was at Casas Grandes, Chihuahua, where he killed Carmo Antorre and Luis Ortiz for refusing to pay him the money he demanded for their manufacture of Mezcal. In the same year he tortured a lady named Senora Maria de la Luz Gomez until he made her pay him $600, on the day from the effects of the barbarous treatment she received.

Murders in Cold Blood.

Late in the same month he entered the town of San Andres, Chihuahua, and assaulted the house of Senor Babas Muren an hacienda, who with his two sons, tried to defend themselves. Two of his guests were killed, but the Murgen was away. Villa then got hold of two sons-in-law of Murgen, who had not taken any part in the fight, and after torturing them to say where their father-in-law had hidden his money he had them killed.

Towards the end of the month Villa came into the Spanish, Carranza, whom he is presumed to serve. His press bureau is far more active and his dash as a commander gives to him importance as a news maker, overshadowing for the time being the trail of murder, plunder and outrage which mark his field of operations.

Murder, plunder and outrage are Villa's specialties. He was reared that way, and increasing opportunities have made him a master hand in the business. To Americans he is more worth studying in connection with his published appeal to the United States to raise the embargo on war material and the certainty that his constitutionalist successes he will at once to it not actually in the presidential chair of Mexico.

HUERTA MAY QUIT

DICTATOR REPORTED TO HAVE INSTRUCTED ENVOYS TO OFFER ABDICATION.

ASKS LARGE LOAN IN RETURN

Demands Carranza Be Barred From Presidency; Trust He Help Name New Ruler; That U. S. Loan Mexico Recognized—Former Aid Flees.

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 20—Into Vera Cruz today came a band of men said to be the Huerta delegates that will begin peace proceedings at the Mexican capital on the following four conditions:

1. That General Carranza be forever barred from succeeding to the presidency.

2. That Huerta may have a choice in naming the new ruler of the republic.

2. That the United States make an immediate loan of between three hundred and fifty million and four hundred million dollars to the Mexican government.

4. That the United States govern next pay approximately $400,000,000 for the lease of Magdalena bay.

Washington, May 20—Despite the many unofficial reports that Huerta is willing to resign on certain conditions, his government has received nothing to substantiate them, and, in fact, regards them with suspicion as being issuing that the Mexican dictator is trying to throw dust in the administration's eyes.

It is positively known that neither this government nor the Carranza forces for the Huerta representatives to the peace parley at Niagara Falls have received anything from Huerta indicating his intention of submitting any proposition which include his resignation.

It is definitely known also that the administration believes Huerta will not resign at the behest of or under circumstances which will be accepted by the United States.

Luis Veniano Urrutia, who was once Huerta's most trusted counselor in the cabinet and who in an manner of the interior is popularly believed to have been the author of many schemes for the disappearance of the chief's political enemies, arrived here on Monday among other refugees from Mexico. He had fled from the wrath of Huerta.

Doctor Urrutia said he had not been subjected to any overt act of hostility to Huerta, but had decided that he remain within reach of the provisional president was to court death. He had been convinced of this by the testimony of friends and by what he had told had seen. He declared he preferred to enter the American lines and trust to the hospitality of the American authorities in Vera Cruz. He was accompanied by his family and said he expected to remain here indefinitely.

The former minister of the interior declared he had stolen away from the capital in the same way as any other fugitive. He had succeeded in eluding General Huerta's agents and arrived within the American lines without his identity being disclosed so far as he knew.

Vera Cruz, May 19—Activity of Mexican forces beyond the American lines increased during Sunday. Refugees signaled within the American lines and declared that Mexican cavalry was approaching from the outheast. The refugees expressed the opinion that the Mexicans were preparing to attack the city.

Herr Everbusch, German consul at Tampico, was installed by a military aide of the chief of General Caballero's staff, while attempting to arrange for the departure of 140 refugees aboard the Hamburg-American liner Ypiranga. It is reported the captain of the German cruiser Dresden was prepared to land marines, if necessary, to obtain the release of the fugitives.

Arrangements had been made at Tampico for the departure of the refugees, but later the rebel officers ordered all to remain aboard the vessel. Thereupon the consul with an officer of the cruiser Dresden, went to the rebel headquarters.

"The lowbrred German consul make a threat," said the rebel colonel.

The consul protested, whereupon the rebel repeated the insult and reached for a weapon. General Caballero interposed and the departure of the ship was finally arranged after the refugees had been held all night.

It was believed the rebels wanted to extort money from the men and ammunition aboard the Ypiranga, which were not delivered to Huerta.

Washington, May 20—President Huerta's elimination from power in Mexico should be the determination of the mediation conference in Niagara Falls was deemed a certainty after the delegates had explained their attitude to personal friends and departed for New York on the way to the peace meeting, which will be opened Wednesday.

It became clear that the conference would deal not only with the "Tampico incident," but with the internal war of Mexico, and that the establishment of peace, with perhaps a constitutionalist in the provisional presidency, although neither Carranza nor Villa would be the chief object of the conference.

The chief military development of Sunday was a report from Carranza headquarters that the new Huerta bridge over the interoceanic railroad, 21 miles from Vera Cruz, had been destroyed by Mexican federals.

General Funston reported rumors that General Navarette, Mexican commander, was in the vicinity of Vera Cruz with 3,000 men. Army officers seriously doubted, however, that Navarette had so many troops.

Although General Huerta has sent delegates to negotiate differences and then abuse the counselors, there is a growing belief that hostilities may be provoked at any time by the federal troops near Vera Cruz, which may obtain the situation and force another crisis.

Developments affecting foreign interests are expected at Tampico. At the instance of Cherubim W. Ch. Van Sonpard, minister of the Netherlands, instructions were sent by the secretary of the navy to Rear Admiral Mayo at Tampico to forward full information in regard to a reported demand of the constitutionalists there for a "voluntary contribution" to the constitutionalist cause.

Former Head of New Haven Warned by Ex-President to Keep Within the Law—Explains West Chester Deal.

Washington, May 21.—More of the hidden secrets of the financial operations in connection with the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad were revealed here on Tuesday by Charles S. Mellen, when he took the stand in the interstate commerce commission's investigation. Mr. Mellen was formerly president of the New Haven. He was the first witness on the stand. "How long were you president of the Northern Pacific?" was the first question asked by Joseph W. Folk, chief counsel for the commission.

"Six years," answered Mr. Mellen.

"To whom did you owe your election to that office?"

"To Mr. Morgan. He selected me," Mellen replied.

"Were you proud of being Mr. Morgan's man in this post?"

"I was. I was proud of having his confidence."

"Who dominated the board of directors of the New Haven?"

"They voted pretty much as Mr. Morgan and I told them to do in case he did not have his way."

Testifying as to the purchase of the West Chester line, Mr. Mellen said that at a directors' meeting at Bar Harbor he had given consent of a committee to undertake the acquisition and that Mr. Morgan had subsequently placed upon it. Mellen served as an ex officio member of the committee and George McCullough Miller were the other members.

Mellen said he then read the list of directors present at the meeting. Among them were Charles Steele, George Miller, Frank Miller, Miller, Taft and others. Mellen said his principal aim in taking the Harlem River line, which was competing with the New Haven, was that it was the only existing ship lines in the state of Durango, and warehouse in that district.

In the year 1907 he was in partnership with one Francisco Hera, stealing cattle in Durango and selling them in the United States, and then stealing mules and horses in the United States, and selling them in Chihuahua. In consequence of some disagreement he shot the killed Hera in broad daylight, while sitting in the plaza in the city of Durango, in the business part of November, 1910, he attacked the factor of the hacienda of Santa Ana, in the state of Chihuahua, and killed the owner by throwing the latter's daughter from the top of a high staircase and making a high jump, escaping with the girl, Cristina Ortiz, to the United States.

FRANCISCO VILLA, MASTER OF CRIME

Bloody Career of Carranza's Chief General.

MURDERER AND PLUNDERER

Starting as a Cattle Thief, He Has Run the Criminal Gamut—Massacres of Americans and Non-Combatants.

Gen. Francisco Villa, leader of the constitutional forces in northern Mexico, is more frequently in the public eye than the Spanish Carranza, whom he is presumed to serve. His brave bearing is by turns active and his dash as a commander gives to him importance as a news maker, overshadowing for the time being the trail of murder, plunder and outrage which maps his field of operation.

Murder, plunder and outrage are Villa's stepping stones to power in this way, and increasing opportunities have made him a stronger hand in the business. To Americans his career is worth studying in connection with his published appeal to the United States to raise the embargo on war material and the certainty that with constitutionalist success he will at once to if not actually in the presidential chair of Mexico.

Villa's Start in Life.

A biography of Villa published by the Boston Transcript and read by Senator Lodge gives the following summary of his career:

Francisco Villa was born at Las Nieves in the state of Durango about the year 1868. He is wholly uneducated, being unable to read and barely able to sign his name. About the year 1893, when only fourteen years of age, he was sentenced to a term of imprisonment for cattle stealing. On his discharge from camp a picked team of Guanacevi, where a few months later he committed a murder, sentence of imprisonment for homicide. When he came out of prison for the second time he adopted a life of robbery, which had their headquarters in the mountainous region of Durango. The gang was finally broken and scattered, but not before Villa entered the city of Durango, in the state of Durango, and committed a robbery.

In the year 1907 he was in partnership with one Francisco Hera, stealing cattle in Durango and selling them in the United States, and then stealing mules and horses in the United States, and selling them in Chihuahua. In consequence of some disagreement he shot the killed Hera in broad daylight, while sitting in the plaza in the city of Durango, in the business part of November, 1910, he attacked the factor of the hacienda of Santa Ana, in the state of Chihuahua, and killed the owner by throwing the latter's daughter from the top of a high staircase and making a high jump, escaping with the girl, Cristina Ortiz, to the United States.

ASKS LARGE LOAN IN RETURN

Demands Carranza Be Barred From Presidency—That He Help Napoleon Also Offer—That U. S. Loan Mexico $500,000,000—Former Ali Flees.

Vera Cruz, Mex., May 29.—Gen. Victoriano Huerta is said to have sent word to his mediatory delegates that he would resign the presidency of the Mexican republic on the following four conditions:

1. That General Carranza be forever barred from succeeding to the presidency.

2. That Huerta may have a choice in naming the new ruler of the republic.

3. That the United States make an immediate loan of between three hundred and fifty million and two hundred million dollars to the Mexican government.

4. That the United States government pay approximately $1,000,000 for the loss of Magdalena Bay.

Washington, May 29.—Despite the many unofficial reports that Huerta is willing to resign on certain conditions, his government has received nothing to substantiate them, and, in fact, regards them with suspicion as it is recalling that the Mexican dictator is trying to throw dust in the administration eyes.

It is positively known that neither this government, the A. B. C. nor Great Britain has received a copy of the peace parley at Niagara Falls, have received anything from Huerta indicating his intention of submitting any propositions which have been in negotiation.

It is definitely known also that the administration believes Huerta will not resign, at least under circumstances which will be acceptable to the United States.

Dr. Aurelano Urrutia, who was once Huerta's most trusted counselor in the cabinet, and who as minister of the interior is popularly believed to have been the author of many orders for the disappearance of his political enemies, arrived here on Monday aboard the steamship Ipiranga of Italy. He had fled from the wrath of Huerta.

Senor Urrutia said he had not been subjected to any overt act of hostility by Huerta, but he considered that he is main within reach of the provisional president was to court martial him because of his support of the last ditch stand of friends and by what he himself had seen. He declared he preferred to enter the American lines and trust to the hospitality of the American authorities in Vera Cruz. He was accompanied by his family, who said he expected to remain here indefinitely.

The former minister of the interior declared he had stolen away from the capital in the same way as any other fugitive. He had succeeded in eluding federal sleuths and had arrived within the American lines without his identity being disclosed so far as he knew.

Vera Cruz, May 29.—Activity of Mexican forces beyond the American lines increased during Sunday. Refugees appeared within the American lines and declared that Mexican cavalry was approaching from the northeast. These refugees expressed the opinion that the Mexicans were preparing to attack the city.

Herr Everbusch, German consul at Tampico, who boasted of a rebel salute and a member of General Caballero's staff, while attempting to arrange for the departure of 140 refugees from the Hamburg-American liner Ipiranga, is in the custody of the rebels, a German consular official has reported to his government. If confirmed, to obtain the release of the fugitives.

Arrangements had been made at Tampico for the departure of the refugees, but later the rebel officers ordered a halt in the proceedings.

Thereupon the consul with an officer of the cruiser Dresden, went to see the rebel leaders.

The low-bred German consul was not received, however, the report said.

The consul protested, whereupon the rebel repeated the insult and reached for a weapon. General Caballero intervened and the departure of the ship was finally arranged after the embargo had been held all night.

It was believed the rebels wanted an excuse to open the arms and ammunition aboard the Ipiranga, which were not delivered to Huerta.

Washington, May 29.—President Huerta's elimination from power in Mexico though he was delegate to the mediation conferences in Niagara Falls was declared a certainty after the delegates had explained their attitude to personal friends and departed for New York on the way to the peace meeting, which will be opened Wednesday.

It became clear that the conference would deal not only with the "Tampico incident," but with the internal war of Mexico, and that the establishment of peace, with perhaps a constitutionalist in the provisional presidency, although neither Huerta nor Villa, would be the chief object of the conferees.

The chief military development of Sunday was a report from General Funston that the rebel forces began on the Tamaulipas railroad, 25 miles from Vera Cruz, had been garrisoned by Mexican federals.

General Funston reported rumors that General Navarrete, Mexican commander, was in the vicinity of Vera Cruz with 3,000 men. Army officers are busily doubted, however that Navarrete had so many troops.

Although General Huerta has sent delegates to mediate differences and their leaving has caused there is a possibility that hostilities may be provoked at any time by the federal troops near Vera Cruz, which may imitate the situation and force another crisis.

Developments affecting foreign interests are expected at Tampico. At the instance of Chevalier W. L. F. Van Rossum, minister of the Netherlands, instructions were sent by the secretary of the navy to Rear Admiral Moore at Tampico to forward full information in regard to a reported demand of the constitutionalists that for a "voluntary contribution" to the constitutionalist cause.

MORGAN NAMED HIM

MELLEN TESTIFIES HE WAS MADE PRESIDENT OF TWO ROADS BY LATE FINANCIER.

ROOSEVELT IS MENTIONED

Former Head of New Haven Warned by Ex-President to Keep Within the Statutes—Morgan, Vice President, Chester Deal.

Washington, May 21.—More of the hidden secrets of the financial operations in connection with the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad were revealed here on Tuesday by Charles S. Mellen, when he took the stand in the interstate commerce commission investigation. Mr. Mellen was formerly president of the New Haven. He was the first witness called. "How long were you president of the Northern Pacific?" was the first question asked by Joseph W. Folk, chief counsel for the commission.

"Six years," answered Mr. Mellen.

"To whom did you owe your election to that office?"

"To Mr. Morgan. He selected me," Mellen replied.

"Were you proud of being Mr. Morgan's man in this post?"

"I was. I was proud of having his confidence."

"Who dominated the board of directors of the Northern Pacific?"

"They voted pretty much as Mr. Morgan did. I was there small on issues in which he did not have his way."

Testifying as to the structure of the West Chester line, Mr. Mellen said that at a directors' meeting Mr. Morgan had appointed a special committee to undertake the acquisition of the road, that as minority was placed upon it. Mellen served as ex officio president. William Rockefeller was made chairman, McCullough Miller were the other members.

Mellen said then read the list of directors present at the meeting. Among the names were Robert Bacon, Miller, Brush, Milmor, Taft and others. Mellen said the proposal was to take over the road for the Rockefeller interests. Mr. Morgan was opposed to the acquisition, said Mellen, but he was willing to go ahead.

"Did you see Mr. Morgan about the expenditure of this money?"

"Yes; I objected, I demurred. I told him I was dissatisfied with the report of the committee because vast sums of money had been expended without a vote."

"How much did the New Haven put into the property?"

"Between $25,000,000 and $30,000,000."

Mr. Mellen told the commission he conferred with President Roosevelt before he purchased the Boston & Maine railroad to consolidate it with the New Haven. Mr. Roosevelt did not advise the purchase, Mr. Mellen said. He said he did not consider himself free from him in case he should violate the law.

Mr. Mellen said that he paid a man named Gothalsh $1,000,000 to settle a suit.

"What had Gothalsh done to get $1,000,000?"

"He did us."

Mr. Mellen said he borrowed large sums on notes to open this account. In January, 1907, he borrowed between twenty and thirty million dollars.

"I was not surprised that the $11,000,000 was expended. I knew it was placed with Morgan & Co. to be spent in the Boston & Maine investigation."

Mr. Mellen said he made a contract with the New York Construction company to change the Harlem division from a two-thread to a six-thread cross.

"Did you know anyone interested in that company?"

"I may have heard that James E. Gaffney and Charles F. Murphy were in it."

Every magneto, every carburetor, every starting motor and lighting generator—every unit of the car—receives a careful, scrupulous test.

The transmission shafts are mounted on Timken bearings, which give a sturdy construction and reduce friction to the minimum. The axles likewise are designed to overcome friction without sacrificing strength.

The design is so well balanced that the car weighs practically the same at each wheel.

FRANCISCO VILLA, MASTER OF CRIME

Bloody Career of Carranza's Chief General.

MURDERER AND PLUNDERER

Starting as a Cattle Thief, He Has Run the Criminal Gamut—Massacres of Prisoners and Non-Combatants.

San Francisco Villa, leader of the constitutional forces in northern Mexico, is more frequently in the public eye than the Spanish, Carranza, whom he is presumed to serve. His press bureau is far more active and his dash as a commander alive to him popularity as a news maker, otherwise shadowing for the time being the trail of murder, plunder and outrage which made his field of operation.

Murder, plunder and outrage are Villa's specialities. He was reared that way, and, increasing opportunities have made him a leader in the business. To Americans his career is worth studying in connection with the published appeal to the United States to raise the embargo on war material and the certainty that with constitutionalist success he will enter on it if not actually in the presidential chair of Mexico.

Villa's Start in Life.

A biography of Villa compiled by the Boston Transcript and read by Senator Lodge in the United States senate supplies the following facts:

Francisco Villa was born at Lerdo Nieves in the state of Durango about the year 1868. He is wholly uneducated, living outside of schools and barely able to sign his name. About the year 1892, when only fourteen years of age, he was sentenced to a term of imprisonment for cattle stealing. On his discharge he settled in the mining camp of Guanacevi, where a few months later he committed the second offense of imprisonment for homicide. Upon his release from prison for the second time he organized a band of robbers, which had their headquarters in the mountains region of "Durango, in the state of Durango, and were the terror of all that district.

In the year 1907 he was in partnership with one Francisco Duna, dealing cattle in Chihuahua and selling them in the United States, and then stealing mules and horses in the United States, and selling them in Chihuahua. In consequence of some disagreement he shot and killed Duna in broad daylight, without any attempt at the duty part of concealment. He attached the factory of a Mr. Soto, in Allende, state of Chihuahua, and killed the owner. A Mr. Ornelas and his daughter he forced her to shoe where he had killed her father. He was arrested and used for arming a considerable force. He then joined Madero's revolution, uniting his band with Urbina's column. In January, 1911, he was at Jiminez and shot a portion of a hydroplane floating in the water. It will be remembered that some time ago there was an accident to a hydroplane, the pilot had taken the first lord of the admiralty up for several flights there, but the machine was not in good shape. The exact place where the part of the hydroplane was picked up is not given, but it is known that he has an unreported naval mishap. It is impossible to account for this find. It may be recalled that at various times, as far north as Montana and Texas, on the Mexican coast, and especially in Orkney, Parliament and the British navy there are strange events. The stories were never authenticated, and were generally disbelieved. In any case, they happened so long ago that the alleged airship of the Orkneys had nothing to connected with the Lord Durham's freighter.

A Needless Question.

"Did you see my advertisement on the May flower?"

"Why, what a foolish question to ask. You've never heard me boasting that I had have you?"

Necessity for Patience.

Endeavor to be patient in boasting of what you have done to others, and others will sort sooner they believe it. Also, fifteen thousand men, who have been at Avilas, fifteen kilometers from Torreon, had every prisoner shot.

Villa has no prisoners. He kills non-combatants, the greater number being poor people who could have no for want of means or because they happened to be hatted. Villa, they too no part in politics, for all the people in any way connected with the government have left Chihuahua and Durango city. Special mention may be made of the case of Senor Espinosa Trigoyos and Senor Jose A. Yanez, who, though in no way connected with politics, were taken by Villa and were tied to a several days with threats to shoot them until their paid ransoms of $20,000 each. Having obtained from Villa the release of Espinosa, he was put on a train for the border, the train in which they were was caught up at Monterey, and he was shot, together with several officers in Villa's confidence, headed by an authentic report called Miguel Baca Rosquillo, who had been with Villa from the start. Villa then in the presence of the passengers.

Broken Hydroplane at Sea.

A broken hydroplane was picked up at sea off Cape Hatteras and reported about a week ago by the traveler Lord Charles Fredrerick Gordon Lennox, following off the Pacos islands. The portion thus is about 18 feet in length, but there are no identification marks. It has been deposited with the receiver of wrecks at Wilmington, N. C., pending to be some mystery in connection with the matter. The admiralty have sent claims in Orkney and at Cromarty, but so far as is known publicly there has been no accident of a kind to leave a portion of a hydroplane floating in the water. It will be remembered that some time ago there was an accident at Cromarty to a pilot who had taken the first lord of the admiralty up for several flights there, but the machine was not in good shape. The exact place where the part of the hydroplane was picked up is not given, but it is known that he has an unreported naval mishap. It is impossible to account for this find. It may be recalled that at various times, as far north as Montana and Texas, on the Mexican coast, and especially in Orkney, Parliament and the British navy there are strange events. The stories were never authenticated, and were generally disbelieved. In any case, they happened so long ago that the alleged airship of the Orkneys had nothing to connected with the Lord Durham's freighter.

To Raise $50,000 for Building.

Believing the honor of Michigan to be at stake, the Michigan Forest Fire Defense commission opened a campaign at a meeting in Detroit to raise $50,000 for the construction of a Michigan building.

The last legislature by one vote killed a bill that would have provided for such a representation. It is now up to the business interests to provide the funds, if Michigan is to take a course of honor on the exposition grounds. The donors are to be compensated by having their names placed on a well of honor. The site set aside by the exposition management for Michigan's building, will be forfeited if work on the construction is not begun by July 1.

Governor Ferris issued a proclamation urging all business interests to contribute for the honor of the state. The money is to be handled by State Treasurer John Haarer.

Among the commission members in conference were: L. C. Covell, Grand Rapids; R. B. Lawrence, Bay City; John Hayner, Lansing; J. H. McCormick, Kalamazoo; Floyd Allen, Flint; John Treanor, Saginaw; A. The convention voted to have a committee appointed to go into the matter and report back to the next convention whether or not the diocese should come under the proposed pension plan.

Reports of committees were received and discussed. Representations of the status of the church reported a steady growth in membership during the year. There were 1,437 baptisms, 1,117 confirmations and 19,377 communicants, an increase of 847. The Sunday schools in the diocese show an increase of 359 in membership.

He said: "Social service is increasing, personal activity has been raised; missionary gifts, making a total of $66,557, show an increase of $4,000; the amount of added property value only $71,879 stands for debt, showing for the year 97 per cent of the improvements in property were paid for."

Treasurer L. P. Hazard of Muskegon reported receipts of $19,400.63, including $18,318.23 for home missions, $1,082.40 for foreign missions. Paid $12,34 for Sunday school missions, and $4,404.86 for the state extension fund.

Port Huron.—Letters sent out from here by the Teachers' club brought back answers showing that Port Huron tutors are the poorest paid in Michigan, especially those in the grades.

Grand Haven.—Paul Rumph, thirty-four years old, fell from the Sailing Lid Alice and was drowned in Lake Michigan, eight miles from Holland harbor. Rumph had gone out with the fisherman for a pleasure trip.

Mentor.—The body of John Hoffman, twenty-one years old, who was drowned in the Macon drain, near Hudson, was recovered within twenty feet of where the drowning took place. While going over the rapids Hoffman's boat capsized and he rescued his friend but was drowned.

Marshall.—Zola, eleven-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Lusk, was drowned when she fell off a foot bridge into the swollen waters of Rice creek. The water is not two feet deep at any place in the 300-yard stretch down which the girl was swept by the swift current. Her companions were Laura and Lawrence Spencer.

Lansing.—Auditor General Fuller says that all but eight railroads in the state have paid their 1914 taxes. The eight are Detroit, Bay City & Western, $1,000; Ann Arbor, $100,000; Grand Rapids & Northwestern, $1,100; Detroit, Grand Haven & Milwaukee, $155,000; Pere Marquette, $1,000; Wabash, $7,545; Pere Marquette, $546,000; St. Joseph terminal, $12, and Pere Marquette, Leelanau & Manistique, $800.

Battle Creek.—The office of senior warden of the parish of the Episcopal vestrymen for the first time in the church history, Dr. Isaac Ward, Marquette and Cadillac sent delegates.

Jackson.—Zelle Emerson, who has figured in many suffragette escapades in England, has returned to the home of her mother in this city and intends to remain upon her experiences in London. She was said to be in good health.

Albion.—Failure to use an approaching train while falling from the middle of the Lake Shore bridge here nearly cost the life of Henry Hinton, ten years old. A companion ran off the bridge, but Henry tried to cling to one side. The train passed over one hand, and a carstep struck him on the head. He will probably recover.

Battle Creek.—No local physician will be allowed to break the speed laws in the city in the future when going to an emergency call, according to orders given by Mayor Frank W. Dailey.

UNIQUE DEVELOPMENT PROPOSITION.

Several of the members of the Hamilton club of Chicago are working out a development proposition in Benton county that is not of the ordinary. The plan is original in that it is a semi-co-operative company. Each man owns his own land and pays for the improvements he has made. The work, however, is done by crews under a skilled superintendent, a superintendent having being hired, which superintendent was formerly in the apple game in Oregon. There are 640 acres under development, three hundred and ten acres of the total was set to fruit the past spring. One hundred and ten acres was set to apples, 100 acres to cherries and five acres to peaches. The trees for the cherries came from Oregon, as it was believed that Oregon stock could be brought into bearing in less time than Michigan, Indiana or New York stock. This year potatoes and beans are grown between the trees, the land being fertilized heavily enough to produce crops and still feed the trees. The superintendent of the proposition is W. E. Earle, a graduate of the University of Chicago, who is giving the proposition the benefit of his experience in the western apple orchards. The proposition is known as the Hillcrest Fruit Farms.

TRY NEW STUNT IN BOOST WORK

The development proposition is taking a slightly different turn in Western Michigan. As each year has come the progress of development has taken on some new phase. The spring of 1913 was characterized by field work for the three largest orchard propositions in the western Michigan country, Hesperia, Fruitport and Thompsonville. The most significant fact this spring, and without doubt the most important fact for the year, is the apple tree planting campaign centering at Cadillac. Some weeks ago the Northern District Apple growers' association was formed, and funds raised for the buying of a carload of apple trees. These to be sold at cost to the fruit growers of Wexford, Manistee and Benzie counties who would agree to plant the trees and take care of them until they come into bearing. The proposition was so novel and so attractive that orders were soon secured for 15,000 trees. These trees, with 2,000 additional, have already been delivered and are now being placed among the farmers who gave the original orders.

The idea of the association has taken a hold that has surprised its promoters. Well treated trees will be needed for fall delivery, and probably two or three carloads more for delivery a year from now. By taking called into the association it is expected to get trees at a price that permits them to sell at 10, 15 and 20 cents a piece.

It is the ambition of the members of the association to make Cadillac the center of a great apple-growing territory. The greatest part of West Ford country is a high altitude, and it is believed that certain varieties of apples will be found to be particularly grown here than in many parts of the country.

Arrangements are now being made for the securing of bottlehouses where the apples can be packed. Two have bought trucks, and see that these trees are in the right condition to ship when the time comes.

In the combined charter, social and homeopathic departments, Frank Dodd, a "dent" from Granville, N. Y., has been elected president, and Ben Petrosn and Prof. Herbert Sadler were elected faculty representatives.

BERLIN'S CIVIC SYSTEMS.

Professor Asserts German Capital Far Outstrips American Cities.

Professor Edmund James of the University of Pennsylvania in a lecture delivered recently said that Berlin goes far ahead of any American city in municipal affairs in the whole population. The government of the city is carried on by business men through the city council of 144 deputies, which is held responsible. It appoints a mayor for twelve years and an administrative body of thirty-four members of whom are paid good salaries to give their city the benefit of their technical knowledge and experience.

Berlin's housekeeping is remarkable, as seen in the immaculate parks and streets, public squares and office centers." Professor Lingelbach went on to say, "The whole city is divided into collection of garbage, ashes and paper is made by night. The streets are then washed and the entire city made fresh and ready for the business day. The system of the food supply is real and effective. The Prussian government takes its business seriously.

"The successful conduct of business affairs requires centralized responsibility in the hands of experts. Bring our American plan, with its checks and balances and subservience to a state charter, into Prussia and it is, therefore, unreasonable to expect our cities to go into municipal activities to the extent done by the Germans. We must keep in mind two facts—first that in America the responsibility is not centered in the council, as in Berlin, but in the mayor, who also has an equal voice in the direction of city affairs.

"Germany has got entirely away from the concept of the state as peculiar to the first half of the nineteenth century, that government existed only to protect life and property, maintain military services and levy taxes. In Prussia there is everywhere the clear recognition of the rights and claims of society as a whole, of the social consciousness that has completely superseded individualism and of the fact that many of the services once regarded as independent are really of necessity collective in their interests and therefore must be controlled by the social group. Business rather than politics prevails in the city management, social duties and social rights take precedence of individual rights, and, finally, social service is the conspicuous characteristic."

Danish Workman's House.

The Copenhagen building society of Denmark has recently planned and erects a structure for a model union of workmen. The town is a model one and very picturesque, each house having a red tile roof, a veranda and a garden. The sitting rooms in the houses are comfortably large, and the kitchens are fitted with gas stoves and all modern conveniences. There are a big playground for children and a large green covered with trees. Forty-six houses are already built and occupied.

A well known medical writer suggests that every household should be commissioned a health officer, the idea being perhaps that the policeman should be authorized to arrest disease on sight.

Coughs and Colds Weaken the System

Continued Coughs, Colds and Bronchial troubles are dangerous and weaken the system. Loss of weight and appetite generally follow. Get a 50c bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery today. It will stop your cough. The first dose helps. The best medicine for Stubborn Coughs, Colds and all Throat and Lung Troubles. Mr. G. A. Tuttle of Manistee, Mich., writes: "My wife was sick during the last winter with a cough and bronchial trouble. Dr. King's New Discovery saved her life." Good for Children. 50c & $1.00. THE GRANGE

SOME GOOD WORK

Activities of the Grange In Massachusetts.

Community Service Is the Keynote to Real Endeavor as Illustrated by the Operations of Subordinate Granges in the Old Bay State.

The grange in Massachusetts has been very active in community work. The following is an account of some of the things done last year:

Acton grange raised money for repairing and improving the stage scenery at the town hall, thereby removing the ban that had prohibited the use of the hall; a goodly sum was raised and distributed for the poor children of Boston; $10 was placed at the disposal of two aged ladies in the town, who were without adequate means of support; $150 was raised by dramatic events and devoted to installing electric lights in the village church; a beautiful granite drinking fountain was installed in the village common, costing $240 in cash, besides a great deal of labor donated by the grange members.

Plaistow grange gave $25 to an unfortunate brother who lost four horses by drowning; gave $85 for the support of the village pastor and later $17 toward the same purpose; graded the grounds around the town hall and church, at a cost of nearly $70; erected a large sign in front of the town hall indicating the town name and they erected and maintained a street lamp in front of the building; gave a cash donation to a member who lost his home by fire, and ran a fruit and vegetable exhibit at which prizes for the children were awarded.

Hill Top grange built a piece of road 350 feet in length, in front of the town hall and the church, linseeding the entire highway at either end, at a total cost of $167, repainted the town hall steps and gave a large variety of prizes to the school children for work done in sewing, cooking and wood work, and awarded other prizes to those students attaining the highest rank in high school work.

Bridgewater grange purchased a plot of ground, erected an exhibition hall and ran an agricultural fair that netted $1,000 and which crossed throughout that entire section great interest in better agriculture.

North Reading grange spent $120 in fitting up and furnishing a town reading room, connected with the public library.

In Norwood, Mass., an effort was being made to start a hospital. This effort had "hung fire" for quite awhile and little progress had been made. Last spring it was decided to hold a big fair in September to boost the project. It was hoped in this way to create enthusiasm and raise money for the hospital. The idea was all right, but what was necessary was active leadership. A little over a month before the fair was to be held but little had been done to the way of preparation. Then the grange, rose to the occasion, became an active leader in the preparations, aroused interest in the affair and the fair was carried through to success, with a profit of $1,500 for the hospital fund.

One year ago the grounds about the church costing $40; improved the grounds about the school, costing $50; set out fry about the town pound, $10; total, $75. Two granites placed drinking fountains on the town common, $350; one paid for lighting village streets, $40; contributed toward incandescent of the town, $75; placed flower bed at the railroad station and raised for same; provided waste cans on the village streets and set out plants on the village common, $42; offered and paid as prizes for destroying tent caterpillars, $25; offered and paid as prizes for destroying brown-tail moths, $40; supplied with white carnations all attendants at church on Mother's day, $5; gave toward Old Home day, $250; contributed toward painting the village church, $12; allows free use of the piano to all using the town hall; gave prize to the children making the best exhibit at the local fair, $5; sends flowers each week to the hospitals in adjacent city; provided organs and candy for the children at Christmas; several gave toward the expense of the district nurse, sums ranging from $10 to $50; gave to the Village Improvement society, $10; provided books on agriculture for the public library; conducted a children's fair and dedicated, awaiting in prizes $25, for beautifying the grounds of the local hospital, by setting out trees, $50; offered prizes at the New England fair aggregating $50; offered prizes to children for agricultural products, sewing and cooking, $25; held a children's garden contest, distributed 2,000 packages of seeds and awarded prizes for the best results; improved the appearance of the public dump by planting shrubbery about the place; placed signs at the street corners and removed brush and obstructions to lessen the danger of travel on the highway; repaired the bike shelds in the rear of the church; contributed $25 toward an obstetric outfit for the town hall; graded the public library grounds at a cost of $20; contributed $10 toward buying a vitrine for the public hall; conducted a vigorous growing contest.

HUERTA'S PRISON SURVIVAL OF FORTRESS A THE DARK AGES

Shocking Revelations Mark Americans' Rescue of Half Crazed Inmates.

Endured a Living Death In Dungeons of Vera Cruz Harbor Landmark.

VIVID details of the rescue of prisoners in the old prison fortress of San Juan de Ulua by American officers and marines are given by correspondents for the New York Times and New York Tribune stationed at Vera Cruz. The prison is a famous landmark of Vera Cruz harbor and a task of this description. It is an impressive looking structure built in the old Spanish style and looming up as the most conspicuous object at the entrance to the harbor, with its high clock-tower facing the sea and pitched snow white.

All through the recent fighting at Vera Cruz and the uncertainty of succeeding days the Mexican flag floated above the old fortress and it was supposed that there were several hundred in the prison which might conceivably be issued at the Tampico anchored scarcely 200 yards away. In fact, the Prairie's commander had warned the commander of the fort that he would fire on it at the first sign of activity near the torpedo tube.

Famous Led to Surrender.

The prison is on an island, and the scarcity of provisions at last compelled the commander, Colonel Tavito Vidi, to ask that it be turned peacefully over to the Americans, and Captain Chamberlain, Lieutenant G. K. Shuler and a company of marines from the North Dakota quickly took possession of the place.

ANCIENT PRISON FORTRESS OF SAN JUAN DE ULUA, WHERE AMERICAN MARINES FOUND SEVERAL HUNDRED PRISONERS IN A PITIABLE CONDITION.

The prisoners were found to number more than 300, and a large number of the men when released wandered about the streets of Vera Cruz in a pitiable condition, with unkempt beards, jacking sanity and friends and acting like all the world as if they were lost children.

Tablet to Americans.

In going through the prison the marines found at one place a tablet inscribed thus:

"To the memory of the American soldiers who died at San Juan de Ulua island, 1847."

No traces were found of any graves of Americans on the island, which was one of the first landing places of the American troops under General Scott sixty-seven years ago.

Some of the cannon in the fortress were found to have been half eaten away by rust. Several of them, it is estimated, were more than 200 years old.

Many Freed by General Mass.

Of the 1,400 in the place until recently several hundred political prisoners were, it is understood, released by General Mass. The few hundred remaining included a few criminals, but the most of them were mere poor, ignorant peons, taken in southern Mexico and brought north to serve in Huerta's army. All when questioned told the same story—that they had been captured in the state of Tehuano and shipped north to Vera Cruz.

As a result of the terrible conditions existing in the fortress and the manifest danger to even well men in remaining there Admiral Fletcher gave orders that all the prisoners capable of bearing no charges were proof to warrant their imprisonment should be released. Those against whom there were serious charges have been transferred to military quarters.

Noted Leader In Dungeon.

Among the political prisoners released was Senor Pedro Heiasa Gordoa, one of the most widely known politicians in Mexico, who formerly was the leader of the Liberal party. He was arrested in Vera Cruz Feb. 16 but after the discovery of an alleged plot in the capital by the Huerta secret service again was released. Later information that denied Senor Calderon was deeply interested.

No charge had been made against at least two of those incarcerated, in the Huerta prisons, were time-stained and stripes now fly. It is in command of Captain Stickney, commander of the Prairie.

TIRELESS MEXICAN SOLDIERS.

Care Little About What They Eat, but Can't Fight Without Cigarettes.

J. I. W. Hotchkiss of Philadelphia, who had spent much time in Mexico, is of the opinion that the United States may not have much trouble in a war with Mexico from a conquering standpoint, because, he says, "a Mexican never sleeps and a Mexican army never has a commissary department. The soldiers subsist, almost altogether on tortillas, which is a thin cake made of corn.

"Mexicans seem never to tire and never to sleep," said Mr. Hotchkiss. "They will travel all day, often carrying heavy loads, and then sit up and talk all night. If they have plenty of cigarettes they can do almost anything the understanding that the cigarettes or cigarette do not run out. A Mexican soldier might be able to fight without his tortillas, but he could never fight without his cigarette.

"The Mexican soldier is not brave nor ultra patriotic. Most of them are interested in enlarging their own importance and glory, and the rank and file of the army is composed mostly of Indians. Notwithstanding it will be no easy task for the United States to bring order out of the chaos down there."

The VALIANTS of VIRGINIA

SYNOPSIS.

John Valiant, a rich society favorite, suddenly disowns his father Stephen Valiant, who his father founded and made wealthy, and goes to Virginia to the ancestral home of his forbears in the mountain fastnesses. His entire inheritance consists of an old manor—or a hundred acres of land—and the family motto, which is "Noblesse Oblige." The Valiant Dummy court he meets Shirley Lamar, an accomplished beauty and the belle that he is going to like Virginia in spite of himself. Shirley's father, Colonel John Mayo Lamar, is a Confederate veteran who lives in the former was killed. Valiant finds Shirley's brother, Jimmie, with whom he is soon chum, and Shirley herself is surprised by a fox hunting party which is being entertained by the Lamars. Jimmie, at the head of the party, leaps a fence and lands in the middle of Lamar's garden, call the tragedy in which the other Valiants lived and died. Valiant finds Jimmie's sister Virginia, who has never had a lover before, and Jimmie is a lover for him.

They stood on the edge of a stony ravine which widened at one end to a shallow marshy valley. The rocks were covered with gray green fleshy creepers, swound with curly yellow tendrils of yellow flowers. Across the ravine, on a lower level, began a grove of spiral trees that reached up into the long stretch of unclipped forest he had seen from his house.

"Do you like it, sahbe, without withdraving his eyes.

"I've lived in it my life. I love everything about Damory Court, found as it is, with one of the finest and most beautiful estates in all Virginia. There's nothing fine about it, I'm just being lazy, where those hemlocks stand, is where the duel the children spoke of was fought."

He turned at him curiously. "Didn't you know? That was the reason the place was named Valiant. Valiant lived here, and the owner of another plantation, who was named Sassamon, quarreled. They fought, the story is, under those big hemlock trees. Sassamon was killed."

He looked out across the distance—he could not bear to look at John Valiant.

"It was a lucky lie, sahbe, never come back; he lived in New York till he died. He was the father of the cousin I pretend owes you. You never heard the story?"

"No," he admitted. "I—till quite recently I never heard of Damory Court."

"That was the last duel ever fought in Virginia. Dueling was a dreadful custom. I'm glad it's gone. Aren't you?"

"Yes," he said slowly, "it was a thing that cut two ways. Perhaps Virginia, if he could have had his choice afterward, would rather have been trying there that morning than Sassamon."

"He must have suffered, too," she agreed, "or he wouldn't have called himself as he did." I used to think, if it was a love quarrel—whether they could have been in love with the same woman.

"But why should he go away?"

"I can't imagine unless she had really loved the other man. If so, she couldn't have borne seeing Valiant afterward." She paused with a little laugh. "But then," she said, "it may have been nothing so romantic. Valiant's grandfather, who was known as Devil John, is said to have called a man out because he rode past him on the Wrong side. Our ancestors in Virginia were afraid, didn't stand on ceremony when they felt insulted."

He did not smile. He was looking out once more over the luminous stretch of fields, his attention forgotten by her. Curious and painful questions were running through his brain. Was he an effect he had never suspected, called his attention to what she was saying.

"You wonder, I suppose, that we Text as we do towards these outsiders, and set store by them, side—yes, and brag of them handsome as we do. But that is our blood. You Northerners think we're desperately conceited," she smiled, "but it's true. We're still as proud of our land, and its ofs, as Valiant and love them as well as our ancestors ever did. Do you wonder we resent their nonchalance to people who don't care for them in the southern way?

"But suppose the newcomers do care for them?"

Her lips curled. "A young millionaire who has lived all his life in New York to own, for Damory Court! I could absolutely rick, brought up in a superhatural atmosphere of noise and hurry and excitement."

He stared uncomfortably. Be that was what one feared, he felt, for his self flushing. He had wondered what would be his impression of the neighborhood and its people; their possible opinion of himself had never occurred to him.

"Not the slightest," she said lightfervently.

"You are so certain of this without ever having been him?"

She glanced at him covertly, annoyed that he was pressing the question of the discussion, since the man discussed was certainly his patron, maybe his friend. But his inattentive air roused a certain balky willfulness that would have its way. "It's true I've never been him," she said, "but I've read about him a hundred times in the Sunday supplements. He's a regular feature of the high-roller section. His idea of a good time is a cocktail served at Sherry's. Why, a girl told me once that there was a cigarette named after him—the vanity Valiant!

"Isn't that beside the point? Because he has been an idiot, must he necessarily be a—vandal?"

She laughed again. "He wouldn't call it vandalism. He'd think it decorating, and would be ready to make Damory Court as frantically different as possible. He would put up a glass cupola and a porte-cochere, all up-to-date and vanishing, and put on—oh horrors! a house where the Valiant family was, and a modern marble capital instead of the summer-house, and in it a size-shaped tracks—"

"Stop!" he said, impulsive and explosive in John Valiant's nature came out with a bang.

"Why, what's the matter?"

She glanced at him curiously. "Didn't you know? That was the reason the place was named Valiant. Valiant lived here, and the owner of another plantation, who was named Sassamon, quarreled. They fought, the story is, under those big hemlock trees. Sassamon was killed."

SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT

Review of Forthcoming Events in Charlevoix High School Progress

The twenty-sixth annual commencement exercises of the Charlevoix High School will occur next week, June 7th to 10th. The senior class, of twenty-six members, is the largest in the history of the school, and has been exceptional for earnestness and scholarship.

The baccalaureate sermon will be delivered in the Congregational church Sunday evening, June 7th, by Rev. C. E. Taggart.

Contrary to the usual custom, the Commencement proper, at which time the seniors will receive their diplomas, will occur before the class day exercises. This arrangement has been made in order to secure the services of Dr. J. Forsyth Hughes of Detroit, who will deliver the commencement address. This will occur on Monday evening, June 8th at eight o'clock, in the Charlevoix Theatre.

The Class Day exercises will be held in the Charlevoix Theatre on Wednesday evening, June 10th at eight o'clock. The program will represent the three principal departments of the high school work, namely, the Scientific, Commercial and Literary. The class honors have been assigned to Charles Macho, who will represent the class as valedictorian, and Cora Druggett, who, having won the second honor, will deliver the salutatory.

GOOD ROADS IN ARIZONA.

Many Miles of Highway Improved in the Southwest.

Many miles of country roads have been improved in the southwestern country by the application of culche, which, if properly handled, gives satisfaction for a country road of moderate cost. Last season three miles of road near Phoenix were improved by the application of culche and a wearing surface of oiled sand and gravel.

Culche is a local name for a calcareous, cemented deposit which occurs in great abundance in many parts of Arizona, particularly in and near the foothills. When pulverized, wet and compacted by traffic or rolling it forms a macadam or concretelike mass of moderate hardness and fairly high degree of toughness.

The engineer states that the road has a very satisfactory surface, but it remains to be seen whether the sand and oil will last as long as the culche base.

The cost of the road was about $5,000 per mile. Culche was hauled from one and three-quarters to four and three-quarter miles and the oil from four and one-half to seven and one-half miles.—Engineering Record.

PLANNING FOR THE FUTURE.

In every pursuit of life we acknowledge the necessity of planning for the future. Preparedness is just as necessary for large groups of people as for an individual. City planning simply means getting ready for the future in city growth. It is the guidance into proper channels of a community's impulses toward a larger and broader life. On its face it has to do with things physical—the laying out of streets and parks and rapid transit lines. But its real significance is far deeper. A proper city plan has a powerful influence for good upon the mental and moral development of the people. It is the firm base for the building of a healthy and happy community.—George McAneny.

Marks of Social Distinction.

"The Hugglases," said Sherlock Holmes, "are very popular with the upper classes."

"How do you know?" I queried, confident of a brilliant answer.

"Because there are so many gross spots on the pavement in front of their house."

"I don't see the point," said I.

"You soon," said Sherlock.—Newark News.

Potatoes stand fifth among the crops in order of estimated value, the amount for this being $220,000,000, an amount that was exceeded in only one year, and was 13½ per cent above the average of the preceding five years. From 3,898,000 acres, estimated, the estimated production was 352,000,000 bushels, which was below the five-year average and was exceeded by the crops of four other years. For Prosecuting Attorney

REPUBLICAN BANQUET

Charlevoix County Republicans Will Feast at Hotel Eaton Friday Evening of This Week.

Again the republicans of Charlevoix county will gather in conference and demonstrate their party fealty. The Boyne City gathering two weeks ago was a "hummer" and was an emphatic avowal of united organization and unskaken loyalty to old-fashioned republican principles, which have never been in "progressive" ideals when those ideals harmonized with time honored republican doctrine.

On Friday night of this week the clans will again spread their logs under the mahogany, this time at the Hotel Eaton, in this city, and it will be a "feast of reason and a flow of soul."

The distinguished speakers that have signified their intention to be present are Alan Crawford, chairman of the Michigan State Central Committee; Grant Fellows, attorney general; Senator Frank Scott, of Alpena, and Joe E. Bayless, of the Soo, the two latter being the only candidates for congress from this district. These are all strong men and eloquent speakers.

Of course these state numbers will be augmented by a galaxy of Charlevoix county celebrities, and the event will be one long to be remembered.

SENATOR FRANK SCOTT

JOS. E. BAYLESS

Caesar Was a Great Road Builder

So is "Dit" Hammond, county road commissioner. In fact we do not think Dit's superior anywhere—not even in the West Michigan pike.

We suppose the other two members of the board are doing their work well, and we make no invidious comparisons, but we know that Hammond is on the job from early morning until the close of day, and a trip down north will convince you that Julius Caesar built no better Roman roads than those sections that are completed on the Petoskey highway.

Commissioner Hammond's allotment of money for the two mile section was $7,500. He will complete the work by September first and have enough money left to build another mile on the section south of the city.

He is wise to the fact that adequate drainage is the great requisite, and he has built five concrete culverts that will stand until the crack of doom. Every foot of the road will have good water-shed and ditching.

He has the $1,100 county power portable gravel screen planted near the Cooper hill, and it is a most useful auxiliary. Curves are being straightened, grades reduced, gullies filled, and when that two miles of highway is completed we believe it will be a prize winner. Dit says he enjoys the work immensely.

The commissioner claims no personal credit for the Greensky hill job, although it was done under his supervision. It was chiefly volunteer "bee" work, but that terrible climb has been transformed into an easy gradient and will be well trained.

At present Dit has a section that is very bad, and he crawls at the patience of the traveling public until he puts the polish on.

But "Dit" Hammond knows how.

For Sheriff!

I hereby announce myself as a candidate of the office of Sheriff of Charlevoix county on the republican ticket.

CHARLES NOVAK.

OSBORN MAY ACCEPT

If Republicans and Progressives Believe That He Can Assist in Uniting Parties

It is thought that my candidacy will unite the republicans and the progressives of Michigan, I will make the race for government." This was the statement made by Ex-Governor Osborn last week when he arrived in New York at the conclusion of his tour around the world. Mr. Osborn said he had heard nothing of the movement to nominate him again until a few days ago in Paris, when he got a message from home. "I am very desirous of uniting the republicans and progressives of Michigan," said Osborn. "I don't want to run for governor again, and I think it quite probable that another nomination can be made that will fully serve the purpose. I have other work more important to me twenty-before me that I would much prefer to do. But if a considerable number of the people of Michigan sincerely desire me to again be the candidate of the republicans for the office of governor, I may think best to accept their advice."

Ex-Governor Osborn thinks he found things in Mexico better than he found them ever found before. "I didn't find any new rivers," he said, "or any mountains not heretofore located on the map, but I have written a book about Mahuguscar, which contains true and well verified statements, which I think will open the eyes of the scientific world.

A reception and banquet in Ex-Governor Osborn's honor will occur in Lansing June 16th at which time it is predicted the former governor will make a more formal announcement.

Editor Perry On Ringsters

The Hon. Bill Mears, of Charlevoix county, once a member of the Michigan legislature, the East Jordan Enterprise says is contemplating entering the race for a candidate for congress, making about the fourteenth man with aspirations. The Charlevoix Herald remarks "Oh ——! ——! ——! ——! ——!! ——!! ——!!! Continued expression of the contents of a letter of Editor Willard A. Smith, and the old signature for the concoction—Elk Rapids Progress.

Editor Perry is as good a newspaper man as there is in the craft, and prints a bang-up good paper; but he is the most unidentified man with one exception, that there is in Northern Michigan, and he is the editor of the Charlevoix Sentinel. The difference between the two is that one is a Bourbon in politics, and the other is a slopy half-breed, who would be a "ringster" if he could. As it is, he is a political lassaissiz, with his hand against everybody, and everybody's hand against him.

They are the "old ringsters" of Northern Michigan who have kept that section true to original republican principles—the same doctrine that nominated the hearts of Lincoln, McKinley and Taft, and that animated the hearts of Theodore Roosevelt up to a point where party rules (which once served his purpose,) failed to gratify his desires.

We tender a gate-keeper in the house of the lord than to dwell in the tents of the half-breeds.

ROBBINS GETS HIS MAN

Alleged Wild-Cat Swindler at Boyne City Makes Get-Away but is Caught at Traverse City

Sheriff Robbins did a good piece of work Thursday when he chased E. L. Wilson from Boyne City and removing him at Traverse City and bringing him back a prisoner.

Wilson, claiming to represent a Toronto land concern induced a Boyne City young man to invest in a lot in British Columbia, paying him $250 cash. All Columbia, paying him $250 cash. All that the young man received was the assurance from Wilson that his deed would be mailed him from Toronto.

The transparency of the deal soon dawned on the supposed victim after Wilson had left town. A warrant was issued and placed in the Sheriff's hands with the result above related.

In justice court at Boyne City on Saturday Wilson was bound over to circuit court on a bond of $500 furnished by Wilson's mother who lives in Boyne City.

Wilson maintains that the deal was legitimate, and that the firm he represents is reputable and of good standing financially, and is confident of acquittal.

DES

TO FORCE REBELS

AGREEMENT FOR A PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT IN MEXICO IS REPORTED.

CARRANZA MEN ARE BARRED

General Huerta May Retire and Successor Be Installed Before Villa and Constitutionalists Take the Capital of Mexico.

Niagara Falls, Ont., May 27.—Much progress was made in the Mexican negotiations within the 24 hours preceding Monday and gave substantial grounds for the belief that an agreement between the American and the Mexican delegates will be reported by the end of this week.

This agreement will provide not only for an adjustment of the dispute between the Huerta administration and the United States, but will contain a declaration on the land question and provide for the organization of a provisional government for Mexico to succeed that of President Huerta, who will voluntarily retire from office.

The provisional government of Mexico will be named in the agreement.

The first agreement developed this 24-hour period was that notice has been served on the constitutionalists by the Washington government that if they send a representative to the mediation conference he will not be received. The evident intention is for the United States and the Mexican delegates to enter into an agreement to bring peace to Mexico and ask the constitutionalists to conform to its conditions.

It appeared from hints given out that the peace conference was trying to establish a provisional government in the place of Huerta's before the constitutionalists could repose Mexico City and attempt to set up their own.

The three South Americans made it plain that while every assert of the Mexican situation, both internal and international, had been laid before the delegates from the United States and Mexico, no formal basis had been reached for the treatment in any specified order of the issues involved.

It is the hope of the Huerta delegates that a new provisional government will be set up in the Mexican capital which the United States will promptly recognize.

With a new government established by Huerta's City, the Mexican delegates believe the constitutionalists would be compelled to accept it if they refused the constituted government, duly recognized and able therefore to get ammunition and munitions of war from foreign countries.

Washington, May 27.—Satisfactory reports from the Mexican mediation conference at Niagara Falls increased the hopes of the Washington government that international warfare can be averted and peace brought to Mexico.

Details were given in official quarters to reports that General Carranza had not yet refused to consider any form of mediation proposals. It was said here officially that Carranza believed that if Villa captured Mexico City there would be need for the good offices of the mediators to insure a stable government could be established.

The Washington government decided to make no protest over the firing on unarmed noncombatants from Vera Cruz. On the contrary, it announced that no more American aeroplanes would sail across the Mexican war lines while the armistice is in force.

San Antonio, Tex., May 27.—The landing of 3,000 constitutionalists on the coast of the Mexican state of Vera Cruz is the beginning of a triple movement against Mexico City, says Albert Carillo, constitutionalist consul. The Vera Cruz force includes 5,000 men, headed by Gen. Cesario Aguilar, taken from the command with which General Gonzales captured Tampico.

Vera Cruz, the Mexican Atlantic bulwark, and Tampico have been fired upon on Monday by Mexican federals, which, according to locate the position of the federal reinforcements which have been moving forward in the direction of the American outposts at Vergara, four miles south of Vera Cruz.

Two flights were made by the aviators. On the first trip they discovered 50 mounted federals a mile from the American outposts, and the second trip found that this body had been increased to 100 and had moved to closer to the American line, while a mile farther to the north a second group was discovered numbering about one hundred and fifty men. This latter body was preceding an intrenchment between two hills.

It was from the latter position that the shots were fired, Sunday night and were fired but none hit the aeroplane. No shots were fired Monday. Another can fleet.

Washington, May 25.—Huerta on Saturday notified the United States through Ambassador Riano that he must take active steps against the 2,000 rebels that have landed near Vera Cruz. His notification was given in order that there may be no misapprehension on the part of this country that he is about to break the armistice by massing troops to meet the rebels.

Mexico City, May 25.—John R. Silliman, vice-consul of the United States at Saltillo, about whose safety there has been grave doubt in Washington for more than two weeks because of the failure to get any direct word from him, arrived here Monday on a train from the north. He registered at a hotel as "compadre" of J. De Gomer, who came from San Luis Potosi, but he went to the Hamilton hotel to stay. He left Saturday for the States by way of Vera Cruz.

The delay in his arrival was due to the fact that the railroad tracks were torn up at several points and also to several encounters which the military escort of 100 men provided for him had with rebel bands.

Galveston, May 25.—After spending ten years in Mexico, the last 15 days of which he spent in a cell three feet square, underground, damp and very miserable, next to the cell occupied by American Vice-Consul Silliman of Saltillo, Mr. Hubert P. Bannister arrived here, bringing with him his wife and three children.

Colonel Goethals admitted that there were dynamite in the locks.

JURY FINDS BECKER GUILTY

The finding was "Guilty in the first degree." The penalty under this is death in the electric chair. Justice Fitzgerald announced that he would impose sentence on May 29.

No sign of emotion showed on the prisoner's face when the foreman of the "strong arm" police squad when the jury handed down the finding that sentenced him to death. His loyal wife burst into tears. She sobbed as each member of the jury arose and answered in turn that he concurred in the finding. As the jury filed out of the courtroom Becker turned around and looked at them, hatred showing in his face.

London, England, May 27.—By a vote of 351 to 274—a majority of 77—the house of commons passed the home rule bill on the third and final reading. The bill becomes law when King George signs it.

Home rule is now a fact. There is no doubt that royal assent will be given to the measure. In the regular course of events, the home rule bill goes next to the house of lords, but the action of the peers will have no effect upon the measure. The powers of the upper house of parliament were destroyed by the act of parliament providing that any bill having been passed in three consecutive sessions of commons become a law by royal assent.

The passage of the home rule bill is a tremendous personal victory for Premier Herbert H. Asquith, who as pilot of the Liberal party, carried the measure to victory after many months of desperate parliamentary struggle.

The division was taken as soon as Premier Asquith had made his final statement, the Unionists refraining from debate in accordance with the instructions from Law. In the lobbies the followers of William O'Brien and the Irish Nationalists joined with the Unionists in voting against the bill.

In the vote by which the home rule bill was passed the government majority was three less than that by which the measure was put through on second reading. The vote on the second reading, which was taken on the night of April 6, was as follows: For, 356; against, 276. Government Majority, 80. Now that the home rule bill has been passed, public interest has shifted and concentrated on Ulster proper. The big events of the near future will take place there. What will Ulster do, now that the home rule bill has been enacted without guarantees the exclusion of Ulster from its provisions?

If Sir Edward Carson, Capt. John Craig and other leaders of the anti-home rule Orangemen put into execution the threats they have made and reiterated during the past few months, civil war will follow in the North of Ireland.

Wonnichen from Belfast, the seat of Unionist feeling in Ulster, stated that news of the passage of the home rule bill created tremendous excitement, and that the municipal authorities, fearing an outbreak, had taken vigorous precautions to maintain order with extra police and with armed troops, if necessary.

A feeling of anxiety pervades official circles.

NATURE OF MEET NOT TOLD

Attends Reception by Spain's Ambassador and Dinner Given by Geographic Society in His Honor at Washington.

Washington, May 28.—Greeted by throngs at the station, applauded by throngs along the streets and wildly cheered by thousands at the big convention hall on Tuesday, Colonel Roosevelt passed a busy twenty-four day in Washington, during which he greeted old friends and laid plans for into the political future.

When informed of the death of Jacob A. Riis Colonel Roosevelt said: "Say, is he dead? My—that breaks me all up. I was going to tell him how shocked I am by that news."

From the Institute Colonel Roosevelt drove to the White House. He was unworried when he called on the president. Not a word was dropped as to what transpired between the president and the former occupant of the White House.

A reception at the home of Senator Lodge, where Colonel Roosevelt greeted Ambassador Riano of Spain and several members of the diplomatic corps, and a dinner in his honor given by former Governor Curtis Guildersleeve, society occupied the colonel's time up to the meeting of the Geographic society. Nothing was let out of the Roosevelt-Wilson conference.

STRIKERS FIRE ON TROOPS

U. S. Patrol Attacked From Hill Near Trinidad, Colo., Camp When They Search for Leader.

Trinidad, Colo., May 28.—For the first time since they assumed control of the strike district of the Colorado coal fields the United States troops were fired on. The shooting occurred on Monday at a miners' camp at Segundo, near Trinidad, where 20 men were fired at the federal troops. The shots were aimed at a patrol from a hillside overlooking the camp after a trooper, who had dodged a missile thrown at him through a window, answered a shot fired at him from the darkness. The patrol, starting to search for the person firing the shot, was surprised by a volley of shots coming from the direction of the hills. Captain Cushman reported that one shot was seen to graze the commandant in a clitch, but made his getaway.

CANADA'S PLACE AS A PRODUCER

Canada Is Getting a Great Many Americans.

"Three young provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta," says a New York financial journal, "have already made themselves one of the greatest primary wheat markets of the world. In 1914 they raised 85,000,000 bushels of wheat. The present rate of progress Canada must soon pass France and India, and stand third in the line of wheat producers. Ultimately it will dispute with Russia and the United States for the first position. Wheat has been the pioneer of our development. Undoubtedly it will prove the same with Canada. In the last calendar year our trade with Canada amounted to 697 million dollars. Only with two countries—the United Kingdom and Germany—is our trade greater. No vivid imagination is needed to see what the future development of Canada means to the people of the United States.

The influx of American settlers to the Canadian prairies is now in full swing. Within the past few days over 80 of them arrived at Bassano carrying with them effects and capital to the value of $100,000. Fifty settlers from Oregon arrived in Alberta a few days ago, while 15 families of settlers from the state of Colorado arrived at Calgary on their journey northwards. The goods and personal effects of the party filled 20 box cars. Of the stock about they had 175 horses, 18 cows, and 2,000 head of poultry. Another class of settler has arrived at Peace, 110 miles west of Edmonton, where no fewer than 200 German farmers have taken up land. There are from good farming families and brought with them a fair amount of capital.

Then in South Saskatchewan, there are large numbers settling. Some days ago 1,000 Dakota people left for that district. Early in April, Peter Geests arrived in Cardiff after a six-day journey from McPherson, Kansas. Mr. Geests had purchased land here was in charge of a party of 35 people from the same part of Kansas and they came through with a special train which included all their stock and implements. The equipment was all Rock Island cars, and was the first all immigrant train ever sent out by that railroad. The farms purchased by the Kansans of the party are amongst the best in the district.

When the Panama exposition opens next year city of the three transcontinental lines in Canada will make a strong appeal to the thousands of those going to visit, and in doing so agricultural development in Western Canada can be seen, and ocular demonstration given those who have heard and not believe seen, or those who have attracted so many hundreds of thousands of American settlers.—Advertisement.

NOT AN ABSOLUTE BLANK

Eye Retains Impression of Last-Seen Spectacle During the Duration of a Wink.

When a person winks his eyes he momentarily covers the entire eyeball, and everything therefore should turn absolutely black and be in total darkness for the instant. As a matter of fact, he certainly is in total darkness, but he is unconscious of the same. The reason he is unconscious is that the eye is incapable of remaining a certain view from fractions of a eighth of a second has elapsed. So the last view he saw before he winked, in fractions of a second, but he is not conscious of it. Just as the eye is not conscious of it for as long as this, a new view arrives to supplant the old one, and the wink is over and is washed. Thus the darkness is not noticed, although there is no doubt that it exists.

This same peculiarity of the eye explains why a moving picture is not a series of separate pictures.

OPENING FOR WOOLEN MILL IN NORTHEASTERN MICHIGAN

By H. J. DANIELS.

The sheep industry of northeastern Michigan has grown so fast in the last few years that it would seem a safe venture for business men to start a woolen mill in that part of the state. Now the wool output from the flocks of thousands of sheep goes to the eastern mills and the nation purchased this wool from Chicago or other packing house centers. Thus a great revenue is lost to the state.

Sheep raising has become so extensive a factor in the development of the northeastern part of the state that the producers are beginning to wonder why some effort is not made to utilize the wool at home. Richland township, Genesee county, was once one of Michigan's most dense forests. With the disappearance of the timber came a great agricultural community, with sheep raising the leading industry. At last shearing time one woolgrowing firm alone shipped 60,000 pounds, for which 32 cents a pound was received. Other growers in that section shipped proportionate amounts. But there are no mills in that part of the state and the mod of cooperation between farmer and factory man is more apparent every day there.

Cattle raking is making great strides in the same part of the state. One ranchman has for stocked a ranch with 300 head of cattle and 400 sheep. Many others will produce large herds of cattle and sheep as soon as they find their way to the packing houses of cattle and sheep. Northeastern Michigan is an industrial institution to utilize what the cattle raiser produces. Woolen mills and packing houses are in great demand.

PLANTING MORE FRUIT TREES.

Eli Clairs will receive especial attention this season of the state fair in increasing the number of its fruit trees. Thousands of trees will be set out in that section.

One of the large orchards will be that of J. J. Donelan, west of town, who is setting out 700 peach trees, in addition to the same number of apples and peach and apple trees which he already has. The Donelan fruit has 75 acres of six-year-old grapes from which he expects a bounteous harvest. Its the fall.

Emerson Hogue, in the same vicinity, is setting out 1,000 more trees. Peaches and plums are his new varieties this year. O. T. Hanna is increasing his peach orchard this year to nearly 400 trees of the Elberta variety. Jasper Dowell, Ernest Dowell, Jesse Daley, Eugene Sprague and William Meaner are among those who are making large extensions. Mr. Sprague has been putting strawberries in his orchards, which consists of apple trees alternated with rows of plum and peach trees. He has brought home a few strawberries.

John Zick of Flushing will this season put out 2,000 peach trees and several hundred pear trees, which will make him the owner of one of the largest orchards in the state. H. H. Hogue, who last 300 apple trees due to rabbits, is replacing them. The use of tarred paper is of no use, according to Mr. Hogue, in case where the trees are of the low-branching variety, as the trees, for these pests can jump into the branches and eat away. Therefore, he says, he will resort to his rifle and get rid of rabbits.

GOING ALFALFA MAD.

In the Grand Traverse country the farmers are going alfalfa mad and are quite willing to take up with the newfangled notions of how to raise it.

Portrons and a half bushels of wheat to the acre on a Michigan farm is a record. That means the very soil of farming, and the Church farm is one of the good farms in that section. Thus shows what a farmer who does stuff out the wheat in that very way is at Vermontville, Eaton county. Last year on the H. H. Church farm, near that little village, the wheat crop averaged that number of bushels to the acre. That shows the very soil of farming, and the Church farm is one of the good farms in that section. gestions showed conclusively that such was not the case. Alfalfa is likely to be the class all over the state where land has been worked hard for years. For alfalfa, lime must be used to a great extent on all old land.

GREAT POTATO SECTION.

Col. W. C. Mott of Mencmiton, secretary-manager of the Upper Peninsula Development bureau, believes that in time his part of the state will be well known for its potatoes as Kalkaska county is for celery, California for oranges, Florida for grapefruit, Colorado for mushrooms, southwestern Michigan for peaches and Detroit for automobiles.

The potato is less aristocratic than some of the other products named. Yet it appeals more to the hot pollet and the proletariat, but the latter are in the majority, the big consumers of the foodstuff, and if the upper peninsula can sell them any considerable quantity of their potatoes then the upper

PRODUCTIVE MICHIGAN WHEAT FARM

A Fine Yield of Potatoes in Mecosta County.

Around Big Rapids, where the farms have been worked many years, farmers still get 200 and 300 bushels of potatoes to the acre—not all of them, but some of the best of them. In the new country farther to the north this is a yield is not considered unusual, and can be secured by any farmer with the ability to work his land. Yields in the older agricultural sections where the fertility of the soil has been worked out gradually, 250 bushels of potatoes to the acre is a fine crop. By using fertilizers and using good fertilizer, farmers in Mecosta county the last few years have been getting some crops of potatoes that are a surprise to themselves and the state. Some of the acreage in that crop around Big Rapids have been very large, sometimes as many as 50 acres being in one field. The quality of the stock has been good there in 1914 years.

Michigan ranks first among the states in the production of beans. The value of her bean crop in 1913 was approximately $10,000,000. It is estimated by the bean dealers of the state that the crop would have been worth at least $5,000,000 more if it had not been damaged by the two diseases Anthracnose and Blight. When the shortage in yield, discolored beans, shrinkage and cost of hand picking are considered this seems to be a conservative estimate. In many sections the average "pick" of 1913 beans ran as high as eight pounds and in some cases twenty to the bushel. One examination of many samples of seed from various sections of the state it was found that at least 50% of the pickings was made up of diseased seed. A further loss is due to the cost of "picking" and the reduction of price caused by the disease on account of the discolored beans.

At the present season where good areas are being prepared for the 1914 crop from this seed, all should be done to prevent, as far as possible, a repetition of last year's loss. The only way which can be done is this: Every of year is to secure seed free from disease and plant it. Where the infected area is a source of contamination to the fields, care should be taken that no seed be sold or allowed to remove as much of the disease as possible. Dealers should be be able to furnish information concerning the history of seed purchased or grown, yielding qualities and freedom from disease.

Michigan farmers do not be bought simply because it is "northern grown" or "eastern grown." Northern diseases are prevalent wherever beans are grown commercially, and such seed is no better than any other. Our decision action would indicate.

The Agricultural College will determine, free of charge, this spring the percentage of disease-infected seed and will answer a report upon the findings in each sample. Two samples should be sent, one from the plot in quantity, and should be mark with the name and address of the sender. An accompanying letter should be marked with the name and address of the sender. An accompanying letter should give the name of the grower, location where grown, and the date picked, the pick per bushel.

In addition to clean seed the practice of crop rotation helps greatly to avoid disease outbreaks. Serious outbreaks of the disease have been reported on fields fertilized with manure from stock fed on bean fodder. Precautions should be taken throughout the season against cultivating in or walking through the bean fields while the vines plants are wet with rain or dew. To do so is to spread the disease from one plant to another.

It is difficult to say which of these diseases is the more injurious. It is well known that in areas where continued wet weather is prevalent, Anthracnose is more noticeable, especially upon the pods and seeds. Blight also is widespread under such conditions, and inflicts serious damage to the crop by its attack upon the leaves, which causes a marked reduction of the yield and uneven ripening of the pods.

A workable control measure is known for Anthracnose but at present the control of blight remains unsolved. Anthracnose can be absolutely avoided by sowing seed from clean pods. The selected pods must have no diseased spots whatever upon them, and must be kept away from diseased pods. These clean pods may be dipped for ten minutes in corrosive sublimate solution (one part to one thousand parts of water), to make doubly sure of avoiding contamination. Dry in the sun away from the dust of the beam fields. Shell so that the dust from the bean fields or from other beans will not be shaken into seed. Store the seed in airtight fruit jars. This seed should be used to plant a seed plot which should be on clean ground. The crop from this seed should be free from Anthracnose and largely free from Blight and if kept from contamination, should give extremely double seed for next year. On a small area this seed can be hand picked and may be easily detected and pulled out and burned. This is a wholesome method of control. Considerable attention has been practiced in Michigan by bean growers and with excellent success and, in the one case carefully examined, the seed from the general crop, while not absolutely free from disease, contained not a single bean that could have been picked out in ordinary commercial hand pickles.

Although the method given is known to eliminate Anthracnose it is with not entirely control blight, which is bacterial disease. The disease germs are carried over from one season to the next on and in the seed and, according to the data accumulated so far, in all probability they are not carried in the soil. Should the germs wash from the affected leaves and pods, with the rain and are disseminated by the wind.

During the present season the College will investigate many phases of the bean disease problem. Certain of the bean varieties grown in the lines of seed distribution, realizing that varieties and conditions vary, it is hoped that through painstaking investigation along lines suggested by committee of the College, which can cause the diseases resistive of control may be perfected.

To stimulate interest in this problem, and to furnish bean growers with first hand knowledge of the conditions a special bulletin (No. 48) has been issued by the Experiment Station, and may be secured by applying to Director R. S. Shaw, East Lansing, Michigan.

GENERAL FARM NOTES

It is highly necessary to have the best seed possible if they are to produce the best results.

The best chick feeds contain a number of grains and seeds in a clean state and from the best of grains. These are the feeds that will give results, and the additional cost over the cheaper product repays the poultry man many times in both the saving of chicks and their better development.

Good seed and good, vigorous, healthy plants are essential for success in vegetable gardening. They are obtained by careful management.

A sun during the blooming season may decimate the setting of fruit in several ways by preventing the pollen from reaching the stigma, both because it is too wet to fly and because pollen-carrying insects are absent, by destroying the viability of the pollen, by injuring the stigma, by preventing fertilization of ovulations or the pollen because of low temperatures.

Good care of charcoal.

People who use plenty of charcoal in their rations for poultry know what it will do for the health of the flock, but many do not realize the value of the wee chick. It promotes digestion, absorbs the bad bacteria and causes the chick to grow fast and take on new life quickly. Experiments made in fattening hogs and capons have shown that the less fed plenty of charcoal because much heavier than the lots deprived of it in the feed.

Hatching Eggs.

Eggs of the Mediterranean breeds will not hatch with the Asiatic breeds. The latter, brown-shelled eggs draw the moisture from the white-shelled eggs, therefore, the white-shelled eggs cannot hatch. The same difficulty occurs with hen eggs and cockerels set together; the hen eggs will not hatch.

Capons in Demand.

There is always a demand for capons.

Tame Chickens Best.

The tamer chickens are the better chickens. Tame fowls are the easiest to be frightened.

Using Artificial Coloring.

If it is desired to use artificial color, it should be added in the cream just before churning.

Disking In.

Disking in, unfortunately for the farmer most concerned, almost surely means harvest.

WOOD PAVEMENTS HERE AND ABROAD

Creosoted Wood Has Become Popular In England, IS MUCH USED IN PARIS.

The American Blocks Have Several Radical Defects, Which Seem to Have Been Entirely Eliminated in Certain of the Foreign Cities.

It has been said that creosoted wood blocks will make the best pavement if provisions could be made for the elimination of the following faults:

First—The tendency to expand, resulting in the buckling and sometimes the upheaval of the pavement, the displacement of blocks.

Second—Slipperiness.

Third—The exudation of oil or "bleeding."

In a comparison of European and American paving, therefore, it is natural, first, to inquire whether or not these faults are observed in European wood block pavements and, if not, why not.

With the exception of two or three slight hubs noticed in London pavements none of the pavements examined in London, Paris, Berlin and other cities exhibited any of the foregoing defects.

Creosoted wood is the most highly esteemed paving material in Austria-Hungary. In 1902 there were 121 miles of this pavement in two of the twenty-eight districts of the city of Vienna. These boroughs comprised the most thickly populated sections of the city. Westminster alone having forty miles. The streets of Westminster are important thoroughfares, but the traffic is principally rubber tired. Although there are a few exceptions, such as the Strand, where there is a considerable metal traffic. Also the whole boroughs of the streets of Westminster and those of purely residential boroughs, such as St. Marylebone, Kensington and

LAYING SWEDISH FIVE STORIES IN PARIS.

Wandsworth, which contain numerous miles of the metal wood paving in London, every street is found to be very heavy but which is very noticeable to the personal observer is that in cities of over 50,000 population have wood block pavements, and in the majority of cases the streets are the principal thoroughfares.

The wear on the blocks is generally very uniform and depressions, potholes or irregularities in surface are not frequent. When surface cuts are made the pavement is repaired with great care, in marked contrast to the cut-and-patch manner prevalent in this country.

In England two classes of wood are used for paving—the softwood and hard wood. The former is generally laid untreated, the woods used being the Australian jarrah and karri, species of eucalyptus. Much was hoped for these woods when they were first introduced, but their use has proved a failure. They are too soft, too rough and noisy and are rapidly going out of fashion.

The pavements of creosoted soft wood generally presented a good appearance, though not equal to that of the best American wood block pavements. They are noisy and, because the wood is soft, and the gravel or coarse sand which is spread over the pavement becomes permanently imbedded in the surface of the wood under the action of traffic.

The creosoted wood block paving in Paris is more profitable for its quantity than for its quality. Up to the end of 1911 Paris had approximately 280,000 square yards of wood paving. As in England, both hard and soft woods have been used. Hard Austrian oak woods have been used to a large extent, but have not given satisfactory results. In appearance the creosoted pine pavements of Paris vary from good to exceedingly bad. There are many streets where the blocks are decayed, and there are also many rough streets. On the whole, the wood block pavements are distinctly inferior to those in any of the American cities.

The method of laying in Paris is superior to that employed in London, the absence of a soft cushion between the concrete and the blocks being especially noteworthy.

MORE MONEY FOR GOOD ROADS.

According to figures compiled by the office of public roads of the department of agriculture, appropriations for the improvement of roads have been increased since 1904. In that year money spent for road improvement amounted to $20,771,117, while in 1913 the expenditure was in excess of $105,000,000.

EXCELLENT ROADS ABROAD.

Average Cost of Maintenance In France and England.

So much is heard about the excellence of roads in England and France that occasionally some consideration of their cost is helpful to a fuller appreciation of what will be necessary in order that systems of equal merit (traffic requirements being considered) may be developed here, says a writer in a recent issue of the Engineering Review.

The road mileage of France in 1911-1912, and the cost at a time when wages were very, very low, was 2,132,000,000. On this basis to secure a system for the 21,000 miles of highways in Massachusetts would require the expenditure of $100,000,000. Moreover, France spends $65,000,000 per annum for maintenance. This is about $120 a mile a year, a figure which, of course, as an average means very little, since on the main roads a much greater amount is spent and on the minor roads considerably less. The minister of public works, too, is recommending that $50,000,000 additional be provided during the next ten or twelve years for some bituminous binder on 4000 miles of national highways, where it is greatly needed.

Turning now to England, where the road surfaces are, on the whole, better than those in France, it is found that the average cost of maintenance on the 27,000 miles of main roads in England and Wales is $475 per mile per annum and that on the 15,000 miles of rural roads in England the average cost of maintenance is $125.

While these figures should not—and in fact will not—discourage persistent effort to improve highway systems in this country, they may well be borne in mind by those who see little good in our every week and month ahead. True it is that in some sections of this country appropriations for a few selected routes have compared well with those quoted; but taking the country generally, the amounts available have been entirely inadequate compared with English and French practice.

WILL BUY CEMENT FOR ROADS

Illinois State Commission Has Decided to Furnish Supplies.

The state highway commission will purchase all the cement used to build Illinois "state aid roads." The members reached this conclusion recently and have sent letters to cement companies asking for bids. The commission hopes to secure the best quality of materials at the lowest possible cost. It also will give the small contractor an equal chance with the big operator in road building. The plan to furnish cement to the contractors was evolved after an investigation of the conditions in Wisconsin, California and Michigan, where similar operations have been successful.

"We believe the commission's plan to purchase the cement will give the small contractor who cannot afford to buy in great quantities an equal chance with the big operator who can," said A. D. Gash, chairman of the commission, in announcing the plan. "When over a contractor bids on constructing a piece of road we will bidder from his bid the cost of cement. I believe too that our plan will insure good materials and better construction."

Cook county's allotment of $120,000 from the state aid fund was effectively turned over to the county board by the commission. This, together with the $120,320 appropriated by the county board for roads to meet the re-allotment of the state aid and the $80,000 appropriated for use of the roads and bridges committee, constitutes a total of $320,320 that will be spent for good roads in Cook county this year.

MAY 30 FIFTY YEARS AGO

CONFLUENCE BETWEEN GRANT AND PEMBERTON

ALEXANDRIA, LA.

AS THE ranks—piteously thinner year after year, that they were last—of veterans file through the crowded streets of hundreds of American cities on Memorial day, the minds of those who fought between the blue or the gray will turn to a May 30 of 51 years ago, when where and what were transpiring those deeds which will be commemorated by Memorial day.

Memorial day was not observed in North and South were busy with the grim business of war. The land shook with the tramp of armed forces and the clamor of artillery. And America was the scene of some of the mightiest battles which history records.

The news which came to the North in those stirring days was not all cheer-united by any means. Lee was threatening the second invasion of the North and the Shenandoah and Cumberland valleys were threatened with becoming seats of war and being ravaged by hostile armies. The little town of Gettysburg had not yet awakened to the fact that it was to be the center of the most colossal struggle of the war, and in Arkansas and Virginia the Union successes had not been all that they might have been.

From the Mississippi campaign came the brightest reports of progress. The eyes of North and South alike were upon Grant and Pemberton at Vicksburg, the almost impregnable stronghold of the Confederacy in the Mississippi valley. Farragut had run past the batteries of New Orleans and Foster was assaulting Grant from the rear in the works around Vicksburg. Newspapers daily printed glowing accounts of the progress of the siege, but the city did not fall. There was more than that the encouraging, heartening news of the day came. On May 30, the day before the date now set for Memorial day, certain New York newspapers printed dispatches stating that Vicksburg had fallen; that Pemberton had escaped from the city with the loss of his military. This report, however, was promptly denied.

On the same day authentic accounts and pictures of an engagement at Champion's Hill, near Vicksburg, were received. About five o'clock in the morning of May 14 General Grant had received information from two men who had been

BATTLE OF CHAMPION HILLS

Grant immediately recalled Sherman from Jackson and directed him to set I one division with an ammunition train to join his corps. Before noon an hour after sending this dispatch Steele's division was under way. The Union forces moved cautiously, with pickets thrown in advance, by several roads. Smith's division on the southernmost road was the first to encounter the enemy's pickets. They were driven in, as were the pickets confronting Osterhaus on the middle road and Hovey on the northernmost road. By the time Grant arrived Hovey's scientific had assumed almost the proportions of a battle.

Pemberton selected a position on Champion's Hill to meet the Union forces. General Grant at once realized that the position was a strong one. The hill commanded a view of the surrounding country and was protected by a ravine and heavy shrubbery. The battle of Champion's Hill lasted about four hours, during which time every man of Hovey's division and McPherson's two divisions participated. General Grant drove Pemberton from his position and the city of Vicksburg was never to its doom. Had it not been for negligence on the part of subordinates to promptly obey General Grant's orders that he could have allowed Pemberton's force.

Tempering this bit of hopeful news was the sad tidings of those killed in the engagement. Full lists were being published about the Memorial day season. The Union loss at Champion's Hill was, according to General Grant's memoirs, 410 killed, 1,844 wounded and 187 missing. Hover alone lost 1,200 killed, wounded and missing—one-third of his command. It was estimated that the Confederate loss about 2,000 killed and wounded and 3,000 captured in pursuit and battle. Loring's division, which was the right of Pemberton's line, never got back into Vicksburg, and Pemberton fell back to the black river.

The most cheerful part of this Memorial day news was the fact that it meant Grant and a firm position between Johnston and Pemberton.

Close on the news from Champion's Hill came dispatches describing a fight at Port Hudson, where the Confederates were again driven from their position, and Banks was preparing to assault the bridges. Pontoons were constructed and the boats were ordered in pursuit of Pemberton. After the engagement at Champion's Hill and Big Black river the travel east of Vicksburg was as complete as Grant's limited number of troops would make it. For days the newspapers were filled with the progress of the work of constructing roads and bridges and of ferrying the bayous and city.

Dispatches printed on May 30 gave rise to considerable anxiety over Grant's safety. Johnston was not more than fifty miles in his rear with an army which, in size of its cavalry, and Pemberton had the advantage of the fortifications and entrenchments around Vicksburg. A day or two after May 30 there were rumors of a desperate battle north of Vicksburg and general casualties on the side of the Union. Confirmation of this fell, but were retaken by the Confederates.

In the end of May the marine diet which under Porter did enough for work at Haynes Bluff—under Grant's direction, drove of this was printed largely after the fall of Vicksburg, but not sooner for Memorial day.

There had been much criticism of the administration in the North and the Union army had come in for their share of popular opprobrium for the news of Grant's successes in the West was sorely needed.

It heartened the troops serving in other campaigns and it heartened those at home.

It was not long before what is now Memorial day, that New York, in 1863, received news of the gallant charge of the Eighth Pennsylvania cavalry at Hazel Grove, where "Stonewall" Jackson turned his Union right. Infantry, artillery and cavalry lost heavily in this engagement in Hooker's Chancellorsville campaign.

Great Snooting.

Smith and Jones were walking along the boulevard one afternoon when Brown, who incidentally accoutered, "Speaking of Brown," thoughtfully remarked Jones, "I understand he is something of a shot."

"He is a wonder," was the prompt rejoinder of Smith. "We were out in a field practising the other day when he hit the bullseye the first time."

"Pine for Brown!" commendatorily returned Jones. "Tickled him almost to death, I suppose?"

DAY OF UNION AND LIBERTY

This is the Time the Nation Should Remember the Debt It Owes to the Veteran.

OH MAY 30, 1916, dawns upon a nation of 100,000,000 souls. Thirty years ago the booming of the guns alternated with a deep moan four years long, today we see an exultant republic, running swiftly toward its mark, the fuller and more glorious morning.

And whom shall we thank for this? The veterans of the Civil war. Memorial day beneath their sacred battle flags, and the men who fought today beneath the blue of the sky and the stars of the night. How great their sacrifice! Some gave heroism all they had—even their names. They lie in unmarked graves, their very place of sepulture forgotten. Their name is lost, and they have gained a name the which neither man nor time can wrest from them—the name of Patriot.

Their purpose gave us peace; Liberty to their force.

It is for us of the younger generation, whose eyes opened on a country wrapped in peace, to fill up our hearts as time with the precious wine of gratitude and offer them, brimming over, to that Grand Army of the Republic which marches in fresh and spirit on Memorial day. Are these shadowy and latitude-rendered Bull Run, and Spottsylvania, and the Wilderness, and Manassas, and Malvern Hill, and Cold Harbor, and Gettysburg and Atlanta? Well, might there be when the nation at the time rose on memory's wings to the heights of denting report of those killed in the engagement. Full lists were being published about the Memorial day season. The Union loss at Champion's Hill was, according to General Grant's memoirs, 410 killed, 1,844 wounded and 187 missing. Hover alone lost 1,200 killed, wounded and missing—one-third of his command. It was estimated that the Confederate loss about 2,000 killed and wounded and 3,000 captured in pursuit and battle. Loring's division, which was the right of Pemberton's line, never got back into Vicksburg, and Pemberton fell back to the black river.

The most cheerful part of this Memorial day news was the fact that it meant Grant and a firm position between Johnston and Pemberton.

Close on the news from Champion's Hill came dispatches describing a fight at Port Hudson, where the Confederates were again driven from their position, and Banks was preparing to assault the bridges. Pontoons were constructed and the boats were ordered in pursuit of Pemberton. After the engagement at Champion's Hill and Big Black river the travel east of Vicksburg was as complete as Grant's limited number of troops would make it. For days the newspapers were filled with the progress of the work of constructing roads and bridges and of ferrying employed on the Jackson and Vicksburg railroad and who had passed through Pemberton's army in the night, that the Confederate general was marching east with 30 regiments of infantry and ten batteries, in all about twenty-five thousand

WHEN THE WAR WAS OVER

Child Learns That Joy Sometimes Finds Deepest Expression in Tears.

It was a morning in early springtime, a day of sunshine and of joy. Joy was in full bloom and on the wind was the odor of the blossoming orchards green in the woods pastures. I was sitting on the back doorstep sifting a bowl of bread and milk and parsley between apostolets to note the glory of woods, pasture and blue sky. I was five four years, old and the beauty of the world was just dawning on me, when to my ears came sudden, fierce, bitter booms like sudden echoes of thunder. The sky was without a cloud. Again I heard the dull boom. Ah! I had it!

"Mother," I called, "someone's pounding on the side of Uncle Dave's barn!"

She came to the door and listened. Again came the dull, thunderous sound. For a moment she listened and then burst out sobbing.

"What's the matter, mother? Don't it scare you? I'm not afraid!"

She stooped over and gathered me to her breast. "The war is over. The war is over," was all she could say, but she said it over and over. "The war is over and your father is coming home!"

"Why, I'd think you'd laugh instead of cry! I'd think you'd be glad instead of sorry." Child that I was, I knew not that her tear-spontaneous fluttle deepest expression in tears.

Ironworkers in Germany.

The number of the world's total production of 18,700 pounds, more than 95 per cent comes from Russia.

Platinum Dear Because So Rare.

Now extensive deposits of platinum have been discovered in Germany, in Westphalia, where iron, lead, copper and zinc mines abound. The platinum occurs in the form of an alloy but in sufficient quantities to guarantee profitable extraction, and it seems possible to obtain the platinum of acceptable quality. Platinum under worldwide conditions will be found in various other parts of the world.

Treating Oats for Smut.

Oats treated for smut by the formaldehyde method are perfectly safe to feed as soon as they have dried out. The formaldehyde solution kills by penetrating and somewhat poisonous, but the oats are exposed to the air, the formaldehyde disappears as gas.

Western Michigan

A Region that is Rapidly Developing as a Fruit Growing and General Farming Section

RASPBERRIES IN WESTERN MICHIGAN

A typical raspberry district is to be found near Frankfort in Benzie county, where there are probably about one hundred acres set out to this tempting small fruit. Just outside the village, up a hill, in the fruit farm of Mr. C. H. Chapman, who has been successful with raspberries for some years. Round acres of raspberries can be seen from the road, and if we step inside the owner will tell us of his methods so that we may get some idea of the industry.

The first question that one knowing the raspberry of your friends will ask is as to the market. In regard to that we are told that nearly the entire output of the region goes to the canning factory. The settled price is one dollar per crate of 24 full pints. The factory furnishes the crates, which count thirteen to twenty-four cash. This chief reason that the canning factory is so successful in capturing the output of raspberries is that it relieves the grower of all anxiety. The canning and jam factory is transit that are so dangerous when the fruit is ready to transport. The covers do not need to be fastened on, and if the fruit is so ripe as to be somewhat soft and show a long journey, it is the more acceptable at the canning factory. Because only by ripening on the bushes can the berries develop the maximum sugar content and luscious flavor.

As to the city markets, there is a problem to solve. It is undeniably a mistake to send all of the fruit to Chicago, for markets when small, lots and towns in Michigan are without, yet these same towns cannot take a carload at a time, and inasmuch as the express shipments in small lots cannot be iced with present facilities, the likelihood that the smaller cities will be exploited, as long as the canning factory offers a satisfactory outlet for the fruit, is small. However, one firm raspberries shipped from Frankfort by the Northern Michigan Transportation company, leave at 2:30 p. m. will arrive at Chicago at 8 a. m. the following day, which is

GRAYLING CAMP

Three Thousand Troops Will Pitch Tents on New Military Grounds in August

Officers at the Michigan National Guard headquarters are making preparations for the descent on Grayling, where the camp begins the first of August.

Owing to the fact that this is the first time the new state camp on the shores of Portage lake is to be used for military purposes, there are many preparatory work necessary. Roads have to be built, a water system must be developed and many buildings which will be necessary for storage houses and places of that sort must be erected. Most of the work is well under way.

It is the intention of the military board to make the new camp the finest in the country. The camp is to be occupied this year for the entire month of August, the board having decided upon a regimental camp when will take 3,000 members of the guard there in three sections, each staying ten days.

Frank Scott Has the Lead

State Senator Frank D. Scott, of Alpena, was in this city and section several days last week looking over the field in connection with his congressional candidacy.

In view of the fact that representative Hinckley, of Emmet County has withdrawn from the race, Mr. Scott has it all by himself in the lower peninsula counties and with Jas. E. Bayliss, of the Soo as his only opponent in the new district.

Conditions all point to Scott as the winner. He stands well in his senatorial record and with a recognized ability as a successful legislator.

Flag Day June 14th

Next Sunday, June 14th, has been designated by the governor as flag day. Every lover of his country recognizes the stars and stripes as something more than an official emblem of national authority. To the true patriot it symbolizes principles of popular government for which thousands have gone their lives.

It is loved because it has been bathed in the best blood of the nation; it is honored because it represents indestructible national integrity and invincible national power.

Cast it loose to the breeze!
Salute it!
Uncover in its presence!
It represents all that there is in American citizenship, American homes and American valor.

GOOD ROADS AND RURAL SCHOOLS

Improvement of Latter Dependent on Better Highways.

CENTERS FOR MEETINGS.

Country Populations Are Now More Willing to Support Better Schools, Which Must Be Made Accessible by Means of Improved Highways.

The rural population is more willing to support better schools today than at any previous time. It is being realized that all educational activities or agencies must be more or less correlated and, more than all else, that the most accessible organization to the surrounding country is the school. Not only is the school the most accessible organization to large centers where high schools are found but, along bad roads, which during the winter, when the schools are usually in session, is one of the most important factors to make it efficient for the children to reach school. This condition causes irregular attendance and restricts the educational opportunities of the child. Not only this, but it often impedes the development of the school and centers or schools into larger, stronger graded schools, with high school courses, directly, is a component principle and corps of teachers, according to the office of public roads, of the United States department of agriculture.

On the other hand, in counties which have improved their roads the schools are easily reached, the average attendance greater, the efficiency happily increased, and economic consolidation made possible. Regular attendance at school means consistent and regular growth of both school and pupil, and consolidation of schools means a maximum of efficiency at a minimum of cost. It is also noteworthy that there is a marked tendency for the consolidated school to become the social and intellectual center of the community. Most modern rural schoolhouses are so constructed as to serve the community as gathering places for various kinds of public meetings, and where cars are used to convey the children to school during the day they are frequently pressed into service to haul the farmers and their wives to institute work, lectures or entertainments at the schoolhouse. The consolidated school becomes a sort of community center to which all educational and social activities converge, and in order that it may properly perform that function all of the highways leading to it should be improved so to render it readily accessible throughout the year.

Hinkley Withdrawn

Representative D. H. Hinkley, of Petoskey, Monday informed his friends of his withdrawal from the congressional race, leaving the field in this part of the district open to Senator Scott, of Alpena. When seen Tuesday representative Hinkley seemed reluctant to discuss his withdrawal, but said that he had discovered that if he continued in the race he would be compelled, in justice to those who were aiding him, to do many things distasteful to him, and be a party to deals which so far he has refused to tolerate.

EARTH ROADS.

Like every other kind of construction work, to be successfully built and maintained earth roads depend upon several essential requirements. Two of these are the drainage question and the grade and alignment. Upon the way in which the surface water is handled may all or not be said to depend the life of the road. If the drainage is faulty or carelessly handled or allowed to go neglected certainly it means the destruction of the road. So, too, in a large measure is the life of the road dependent upon the proper alignment and grade. Often times a change up the hill or down the hill, a curve installed here and one eliminated there or a new channel for the neighboring music creek will mean salvation for the road.—E. A. Kingsley.

Road Building in Mexico.

The road engineers of the department of communication of the federal government have recently completed an inspection of the highway between Puebla and the City of Mexico and pronounce it almost ready for traffic. The greater part of the road is completed. The road passes the great Popocatepetl volcano. It is being constructed by the Mexican government, and, strange as it may seem, in view of the bitterness warfare in Mexico, work on the road has been carried on without molestation.

Indians on New Warpath.

Two Indians, mounted on a cowboy, from the Crow Indian agency in Montana, are carrying a message from Governor Stewart of Montana to President Wilson in Washington, going horseback over the Lincoln highway. Mortimer Brenner, known on the reservation as Sitting Eagle, and Red Fox James are their names.

The purpose of the trip is to remind those in the east with the customs of frontier days, when mail was delivered in this way. Red Fox James will deliver lectures at points where he happens to spend the night on the good roads spirit and the need for better communication by highways for the Indians as well as the white men. Sitting Eagle intends to give exhibitions of rock riding and other Indian and cowboy sports.

The pair left the agency on March 30 and are due in Washington in July. Both are members of the Y. M. C. A.

ARTISTIC FURNISHINGS.

A Dainty Receptacle For Music Books or Records.

The charming music cabinet illustrated may be carried out in any wood that suits the fancy. It is one of the new art designs. The doors are fitted with panel glass on which is a conventionalized cocoa pattern. The sleeves of music may be filed inside the cabinet and music books placed on the shelf underneath. A cabinet of this sort would be a convenient receptacle for the rolls from the automatic piano or the records of the phonograph.

The very latest library and living room sets are beautiful examples of conventionalized adaptation in coloring and design. Studying these em broidered sets haphazardly classified as futurists, we recognize them as definitely oriental.

The sets include scarf, pillow and table mat. One that attracted attention was of rich green rep, done in glistening fiber, in conventional designs with the larger spaces heavily padded so that all of the embroidery formed an exquisitely shaded study in golden brown.

A living room set of scarf, pillow and table mat was made of leather. Brown linen damask cloth, rich in ecclesiastical design, was done in purple, gold, blue, green, terra cotta and brown. The same color scheme was varied in a mercerized rep hand bag, with a touch of red and black to give it a futurist tone. The bag was lined with emerald green satin.

Green Liquid Soap.

Green liquid soap, which is recommended by skin specialists for fine skins or for those which have the pores enlarged, can be made at home. Take equal parts of glycerin, water, alcohol and green castile soap. Shave the soap into the water and stir over the fire until the mixture is smooth. Add the glycerin and lastly, after the kettle is removed from the fire, the alcohol. Add a tablespoonful of olive oil, if perfume is desired.

Antiquity of Leather.

Leather was every known in Egypt and Greece and tombs of manufactured hides were used for ropes, mirrors and the like by ancient nations. The Gordian knot was made of leather thongs. A leather mirror was found at Herculaneum, fifty three times and found useful in 1778.—Kansas City Times.

Children's Hats.

Straw hats of all sorts will be worn by children for silk hats will be worn, one and straw and silk will be combined. One popular hat shows a straw helm of tan, silk, with a crown of darker cross de chine. These little feather hats of brown and yellow are arranged lightly on the right side of the straw band that holds in the fullness of the silk crown, as the bottom. Two of the birds are on silk covered wires and they have to be hanging bird fashion above the dainty hat.

Senator Frank D. Scott, republican candidate for congress has been touring through portions of Antrim and Kalkaska counties and is well received everywhere he goes. Scott has represented this senatorial district four years at Lansing, has an excellent record and is entitled to the votes of the republicans of this district. The 11th congressional district does not place more deserving citizen than Frank D. Scott.

An information received from Memphis, Tenn., last week, Alex H. Lutty, a Syrian, was arrested by Undersheriff Novak, on the charge of passing a worthless check. Lutty was located in Petoskey, and is now in jail awaiting an officer who is on his way north for the prisoner, who has consented to return without requisition, and claims innocence of any intent to defraud. Lutty, the two past summers has conducted a store in the Wilbur building near the bridge.

The resorters are beginning to move in quite fast. Last Saturday the resort special had 122 passengers for Charlevoix and 120 pieces of baggage. Mr. Schwab and family of Nashville, Tenn., arrived in special Pullman car Grasmere. They were very much delighted with the splendid service on the entire trip. The resort special was right on time and Agent Alexander advises that the management of the Pere Marquette are making every effort possible to have those trains on time every day.

TWO LIVES LOST ON LAKE

Gasoline Boat Vega Burns Near Beaver Island—Two Lives Lost

Without any doubt whatever the gasoline boat Vega, of this port was burned near the head of Beaver Island Monday afternoon. In the boat were Will Heath and Jerry Yettaw, and both had their lives.

The Vega was a gasoline pleasure boat and was owned by Guy Lardinier and Jerry Yettaw. She left here Monday about one o'clock for St. James, and had just about time to reach the point where the explosion occurred.

A woman living near the head of the island saw the boat burning about a mile off shore. She ran nearly a mile to a neighbor. When the neighbor reached the ground where that part of the lake was visible only a small cloud of smoke could be seen.

The men were both residents of Charlevoix, and unmarried. Yettaw was a cousin of Lardinier, his partner in the ownership of the boat.

The boat had no yawl, but had six life preservers. She left here with a 75 gallon tank full of gasoline, which may have sprung a leak in the champ ses that was running, causing an explosion that probably prevented them from getting out the life preservers.

[illegible]

As we go to press it has been pretty conclusively proven that Henry Lardinier and Papinsan were also on board the Vega. He was seen on the dock about the time the boat left, and has not been seen since.

THE CLUB BANQUET

Charlevoix County Republicans Again Demonstrate Their Party Loyalty

The banquet of the Charlevoix County Republican Club at the Hotel Elston last Friday night was at least fifty short of what it should have been in attendance. The fact is explained by the statement that at Boyne City and East Jordan school exercises occurred on that night.

But aside from this, the banquet was a great affair. The menu was spoken of by all present as a credit to the Hotel Elston. But the after dinner program, embracing as it did some of the most distinguished republicans of the State, constituted an inspiration to every one present.

Grant Fellows, attorney general; Alex J. Grossbeck, chairman of the republican state committee, and a legion candidates for congress; Joe Dalyea and Frank Scott, 11th district, candidates for congress; Judge Yelland, representative Menominee, J. M. Harris and a score of other local speakers, worked up an enthusiasm that was earnestly demonstrative. But space was given the feast of fact and logic by the task given by Edgar A. Guest, the renowned humorist of the Detroit Free Press, it put every one present on his mettle, and guest was voted "Michigan."

All things considered, the event was a success.

At a business meeting held early in the evening, Harry Cornwallis, East Jordan, was chosen president for the ensuing year; T. O. Bissell, Boyne City, secretary; Lisle Stanahan, Charlevoix, treasurer. All the vice-presidents were re-elected.

Old Settlers Will Gather

The old settlers of the region will get together at Suttons Bay on Friday of this week, and a great time is expected. A delegation of Charlevoix pioneers will attend.

CHARLEVOIX AND SAGINAW

Marriage of Our Mason Rose to a Popular Saginaw Girl

From the Saginaw Daily News.

The wedding of Miss Catharine Carpline Dubiel, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Dubiel, 203 North Andre street, and Mason Harry Rose of Charlevoix, which took place at 7:30 o'clock Tuesday evening, in the First Presbyterian church, was beautiful in its simplicity and one of the most interesting social functions of the season. Rev. Harry Rogers Stark, D. D., pastor of the church, performed the ceremony which was witnessed by an assemblage of about 250 guests, who were ushered in by Myron E. Lepper, Arthur A. Troop and Percy Carrier.

A nail hour organ recital preceded the service, this being given by Miss Alma H. Freeman who played "Humoresque," by Dvorak; "I Love You Truly," by Carrie Jacobs Bond, Oswald's "Serenade" and "Adoration from Holy City," by Gaul. Promptly at 7:30 as the march from Lohengrin was heard the bridal party made its way to the altar through the south aisle, where the groom and his best man, Kraemer Nordrum of Charlevoix, and the officiating clergyman awaited them. The bridesmaids and groomsmen entered in the following order: Miss Iva Dixon and Frank Whitney; Miss Eva Duke and Arthur Dubiel; Miss Susan Zubler and John Dubiel; Miss Ella Freschlet and Carl Hausman; Miss Mable Mead and Tom Dubiel; Miss Clara Otto and Albert Freschlet. Of these Miss Freschlet, Arthur Eyra and John Dubiel and Albert Freschlet are cousins of the bride. Each couple was stationed at regular intervals and faced the center of the aisle while the bride accompanied by her maid of honor, Miss Linette Dubiel, her only sister, entered, meeting the groom before the altar. The other members of the party came forward forming a semi-circle, the ladies passing to the left and the gentlemen to the right. The Presbyterian ring service was used in full. During the ceremony, "Oh Promise Me" was softly played on the organ, and at the close Mendelssohn's wedding march was heard as the bridal party left the church.

The bride wore a gown of ivory whitecrepe de chine, trimmed with handdrawn Venice lace and a single strand of pearls. It was cut on train. Her veil was of white tulle, that worn by her mother 25 years ago, and was becomingly arranged, being caught with a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried an arm bouquet of white roses and sweet peas. The maid of honor was charmingly gowned in crepe de chine in a delicate pink shade. It was trimmed with shadow lace and pearls. Her bouquet was of pink roses. The bridesmaids appeared in dresses of crepe de chine, varying in shades from a delicate flesh to a deep rose hue. They carried similar bouquets of snapdragons and spiraea.

The church altar was prettily decorated with palms, smilax and spring flowers in a color scheme of green and white. The home of the bride was the scene of a reception for 100 relatives and friends was held at the conclusion of the ceremony, was decorated similarly except in the dining room, where the color note was pink and white. The bride's table was beautifully arranged with a basket centerpiece and pink shaded candelabra which cast a pleasant glow over the effect. Bands of white satin ribbon and pink cupids completed the decoration, and no one seemed happier than the groom, and no one more of a host than he carried out in the delicacies which were served.

The bride has resided in Saginaw principally her entire life. She is a graduate of Arthur Hill high school, class of 1907, where she won prominence in the oratorical field, having been the only young woman who ever took first place in the state oratorical winning honor for Arthur Hill. She is also a graduate of the Michigan state normal college, where during her last year she occupied a position in the physical department. She was honored with the position of editor-in-chief of the class annual and in the collegiate contests she tied for first place aboard. After her graduation she engaged in educational work, having taught in the Charlevoix high school and in Saginaw public schools.

The groom is the only son of ex-Mayor and Mrs. S. M. Rose of Charlevoix, Mich. He is a graduate of the Charlevoix high school, class of 1907, and is also an alumnus of the University of Michigan, class of 1911. He is one of Charlevoix's prospective young men holds a responsible position in the post office of that place.

Guests from out of town included Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Rose, parents of the groom, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Bullard of Hickville; Mr. and Mrs. H. Zubler of Bessemer; Mr. and Mrs. John Flood of Lansing; H. K. Bendel, of Chicago; and Paul Purdy of Detroit.

Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Rose left later in the evening for a short lake trip, and they will be at home to their friends in their cottage at 401 Pine street in Charlevoix, after July 1st.

VAN PELT THE PIONEER

Has Been a Live Wire on the Road Question For More Than Thirty Years

One of our early arrivals was George H. Van Pelt, our Georgie was for 32 years has been talking and working for good roads in both Antrim and Charlevoix counties. He drove up from Chicago in a Cadillac car, and while passing through Traverse City he interviewed Mr. Frank Hamilton of the Grand Traverse County Highway Commission and learned that neither Antrim nor Charlevoix had complied with the pledges made for them, and a very good reason why, as neither Mr. Carver of Elk Rapids nor Mr. D. S. Payton of Charlevoix knew what was expected of them.

Five thousand booklets are to be gotten out and to be paid for in advertising. Two pages being assigned to each county, and in less time than it takes to write it, Payton and Van Pelt had the ads, the money and a draft forwarded for same. Also $15 was collected to pay for the signs to be placed on the of the roads directing tourists the way to Charlevoix.

It is a safe prediction that there will be more cars in Charlevoix this year than ever before. It must be Van's soul good to see pretty much work done on the roads, for he has been talking, writing and working for good roads for 32 years, and notwithstanding he has received all communications from him relating to this vital and important question and to Van belongs the credit of being our first good roads advocate.

He went at his old job with the same determination at when he first came into the office of the Sentinel, on his arrival near 32 years ago. He now says the true way to get all the roads good is to hood the county, build roads that will last for years; have the state pay its proportion, because when the state has paid, its responsibility ends, also repairs have to be paid by the tax payers, and as he is one of our heavy property owners his argument must be an honest one.

OSBORN THE CANDIDATE

Former Governor Consents to be Republican Candidate for Governor This Fall

It is now practically certain that Chase S. Osborn will be the republican candidate for governor this fall. That means that he will be the next governor.

At the Lansing banquet given in his honor Wednesday night Mr. Osborn tacitly consented to accept the nomination. With Osborn at the head of the ticket the so-called progressives will fall over each other to get back into line.

Osborn will be governor.

The Sentinel has been a most ardent supporter of Chase S. Osborn, beginning at a period when friends were sometimes positive reprimands came from the Soo. Osborn never sought office. Office sought him. Osborn was the greatest governor Michigan ever had. In ability he is the peer of any American citizen living. He is at the height in his city position in the gift of the American people, and no man living, in our opinion, has more integrity, and quality that contributes to true greatness. In intellect he is a giant; in moral courage he is invincible; in patriotism he is a Patrick Henry; in prophetic vision he is an Alexander Hamilton; in intrepidity he is a Richard Coeur de Lion.

Chase S. Osborn is too great a man for the treadmill of ordinary, mediocre human endeavor. He is a leader of leaders. He belongs to the people. The people know him and will have him.

LOST OCEAN LINER EMPRESS OF IRELAND

969 PERISH IN SEA DISASTER

Great Liner Goes to Bottom at Mouth of St. Lawrence River Following a Collision With a Collier.

Rimouski, Que., May 31—Nine hundred and sixty-nine persons lost their lives Friday morning when the great Canadian Pacific twin screw liner Empress of Ireland was rammed amidships in a thick fog off Father Point in the St. Lawrence and sank by the Norwegian collier Storstad.

Four hundred and eighteen survivors were picked up from floating wreckage and two lifeboats.

And only 17 of the saved are women. Gathered together in groups, the survivors the horror of this week grows with the telling.

Waiters Quickly Engulf Ship.

The doomed ones had little time even to pray. They were engulfed by the cursing, whistling waters that swallowed the big ship inside of nineteen minutes from the time she was struck.

The wireless operators on the Empress, sticking to their posts to the last, had time only to send a few "C. Q. D." calls for help when the rising waters advised their instruments. That silence told the rescuers miles away more potently than a tragic tale doom had overtaken the ship.

Only six hours before the fateful collision the passengers sang as a goodnight hymn "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," played by the Salvation Army band on board.

The members of that band and most of the 150 Salvationists were among the lost.

Survivors Tell of Fog.

It was foggy, according to survivors, when the Empress of Ireland, a steel hulled and subdivided ship of more than eight thousand tons, left Montreal at 4:30 Thursday afternoon in command of H. G. Kendall of the Royal Naval Reserve, one of the most skilled of transatlantic navigators.

Pilotal first also observed the atmosphere and the big ship, in charge of a pilot, proceeded slowly on her way to sea. At midnight the pilot side left near Father Point, shouting a merry "Bon Voyage" as he went down their ladder into his waiting boat.

The darkness at this time was intense and the ship under the slowest speed possible with stereoplexy hold her course. Her decks were deserted. The passengers had all sought their berths with no thought of impending death.

Out of the darkness, on the port side, soon after 2:30 in the morning there loomed the little Norwegian collier, not half the size of the Empress, but fated to be her destroyer.

Not until the collier was almost abeam of the big liner was the danger known on either ship. The fog had blotted out the lights as well as the port and starboard lights of both ships.

Quick orders trumpeted on both vessels were heard. But they came all too late.

Strikes Ship Amidships.

The steel-plated prow of the Storstad struck the liner amidships and then forged aft, ripping and tearing its way through the Empress of Ireland.

Clear to the stern of the Empress of Ireland was the great steel shaving cut from her side, from the top of the hull far below the water line. Into that rent the water poured with the force of a Niagara.

The bow of the Storstad smashed its way through berths on that side of the ship, killing passengers sleeping in their berths and grinding bodies to pieces.

Reaching the stern of the big liner, the Storstad staggered off in the dark mass, her bow crumpled by the impact.

Reaching the stern of the big liner, the Storstad staggered off in the dark mass, her bow crumpled by the impact.

The collision was struck. A geyser of water shot upward from the midship hatchway, mingled with fragments of wreckage that showered down upon the passengers still clinging to the rails forward and upon those struggling in the water.

The explosion destroyed the last hope of the ship's floating until succor could arrive, for the shock had smashed the forward steel bulkhead walls that had up to then shut out the torrents invading the after part. The water rushed forward and the Empress of Ireland, west, swiftly to her doom, carrying down with her hundreds of passengers who stood on her sinking deck, their arms stretched upward and their last cries choked in the engulfing waters.

One of the survivors, relating that last tragic scene on the decks of the doomed ship, said:

"I was asleep like most of the passengers. I was awakened by the crash. There was a sickening crunching of wood and steel and then a grinding ripping sound as the Storstad smashed her way along the port side of our ship.

"I knew that we had been struck and I rushed to the staterooms of some friends and shouted to them to get up, as the ship was sinking. Staterooms doors were open all along the corridor and men and women began to rush for the main companion forward. Those aft must have been drowned in their berths.

Darkness Is Intense.

"On deck officers of the ship, partially dressed, were rushing about urging passengers to be calm. Sailors under orders were trying to launch the lifeboats.

"The darkness was intense and a few minutes after I reached the deck the electric lights went out. At that time there were still hundreds of passengers below trying to grope their way through the darkened corridors to the companionway and reach the deck. Most of them went down with the ship, for the corridors below filled with water the explosion of the boilers.

"I leaped overboard in despair just before the ship went down and managed to find a bit of wreckage to which I clung.

"The gray dawn revealed the government steamers Lady Evelyn and Eg. Wolf rushing to the rescue of the disabled and hastening to aid.

"Some of those in the water tried to swim to the Eureka as she neared the point where the Empress had gone down. One woman, wearing only an underwear, swam to the Lady Evelyn, and was helped on board, but died of exhaustion soon afterwards.

"The work of rescue still was going on when the sun came in a cloudless sky.

"Men and women were clinging to spars and bits of broken planks. Many of the survivors were injured. Some had broken legs, others fractured arms and still others had been injured internally in that last mad rush to get away from the sinking liner.

"Women singing with one hand to little ones, while with the other they tried to keep afloat in the power of wrecks were picked up by the lifeboats and carried on board the rescuing vessels.

Captain Kendall, dazed and unable to give any coherent account of the loss of his ship, was found clinging to a broken spar.

J. W. Langley, rancher, of Canford, B. C., went down with the ship, but held his breath, and, coming to the surface, found a piece of wreckage and clung to it until picked up.

One of the survivors, in explaining the quickness with which the Empress of Ireland went down, said:

THE GRANGE HALL.

Center of All Social Good Things and a Business Necessity Also.

When the new hall is completed it is the pride of the neighborhood, and it is usually one of the best halls for miles around. It is an object of pride and is looked upon as the neighborhood center and a place where such a building may be a great blessing to a neighborhood. It may become a civic center, a sort of advanced school for the study of things of importance to all the community. In order of its importance such a hall ought to be just as large, just as convenient, just as well adapted to lodge purposes and general use, just as well heated and ventilated and kept pleasant and tidy just as carefully, just as wholesomely planned or tended or otherwise cared, as the mother's house will be philly permit. It will be a neighborhood asset and will have that as much to do with improving realty values as the new schoolhouse or the church. It should be furnished with chairs or seats or cushioned stools; but, whatever of pride or comfort, decide beforehand that that will be the permanent furniture. For, whether you do or do not, ninety the chances are a hundred to one that they will be permanent fixtures. For unless your hall is a great exception, having once begun to use a certain style, you will find it extreme inconvenient to make a change even if it is an undesired fault. It will cost a half to be the fault, and it will say long. As an instance, the Patrons of Milwaukee recently remodeled their hall, put in a kitchen, stage, lattice range, cupboards, rest rooms, toilet for gentlemen and improved the main hall. And they now have in the amount of expense, right in the work for lodge purposes, and, of course, the grangers in and of them they are. It was their. The hall is now a source of income. Another instance—a new hall built several years ago furnished with small furniture, an old rusty stove, donations from the selling organizations of the less furniture and from various lodges, and there was not enough of anything. To make a long story apparent, in the interest of $200 would have made things look 100 per cent better. Five hundred dollars would have provided a carpet and a few other needed things. But it was the only thing in the village, and the community decided it would do. It drew good money, but the tenants were not satisfied. As a result it is for sale, and a new hall with good accommodations has all the patronage.

But there is something more to have for a village than a building to be a money maker. The most influence of a neat, clean hall, with well kept floors, attractive kitchen and wall boards, will repay you for the expense and trouble. The hall is used in the pride it gives and the community dining room for the best social gathering of your property and in the neighborhood. It has upon the young people, the most valuable yield of any. Children cannot see dirt and careless housekeeping without being affected by tidy tendencies.

A grange—whose a social or an appreciation will not spend $20 there is a grange without a kitchen, well equipped kitchen, good dishes, a village, good tables and seating arrangements, with good furniture and a janitor who will keep the hall well swept and dusted, is not only possible, but is in fact present. Try it and watch results.—Pacific Grange Bulletin.

"Hester the dirt!" said he, "and he will fly from you, but resist a demon and he will fly at you."

NEW RURAL SCHOOL LAW.

New York Puts Its Rural Schools on Same Plane as High Schools.

The last session of the state of New York passed a rural school bill which has received the enthusiasm of nature and which will place rural school districts on a par in several important particulars with city schools. The general provisions of the law are to the effect that the commissioner of education may up out districts of his own motion suitable for central high schools anywhere in the state at any time, and in these schools there shall be taught the studies usually pursued in village or city high schools as well as agriculture. These new school districts are to be laid out independently of the boundaries of existing school districts towns or counties, and after a district has been laid out only those residing within the boundaries of the said district shall be permitted to vote on the proposition of establishing such a central high school. Fifteen taxpayers may call for a meeting at which a vote shall be taken as to whether such a school shall be established or not. If the vote be favorable the school shall be established and the school district shall have all the privileges of a union school district. It will receive from the state the same money that the territory included in it would if it were divided into several districts and also the allowance made for high school instruction and for instruction in agriculture where such schools are maintained and instruction given.

This rural high school law is one of the most valuable acts of the state legislature for many years. It gives the country boy and girl educational advantages at home equal to any they may have in the city with the addition of instruction in agriculture and in the things with which they should be more familiar and with work so large a majority of them will have to do in the future. These schools will be greatly tend to improve social conditions and will furnish social centers which will be attractive to the people and tend to build up a home pride in the best home communities and in rural affairs.

These schools will be directly and solely under the control of the farmers of the district through a board of education chosen by themselves. They can make them to what they will, and that they will make them such as to serve the interests of the farm and the country whereas they are bound, goes without saying. The general feature of the plan of these schools have been approved by the commissioner of education at Washington, Ohio, we believe, has similar schools, and Minnesota, Massachusetts and Rhode Island are engaged in a movement looking to the establishment of these rural high schools. Let the work progress.

CITY MANAGER IN SPRINGFIELD

Commission Plan Works For Public Service.

A BUSINESS INSTITUTION.

A Noticeable Feature of This Form of Government Is Its Simplicity, and It Presents Possibilities For Telling Results That Count.

Under the commission manager plan of government a municipality is organized as a public service corporation, and its sole purpose is service. It is a business institution devoted to the interests which the inhabitants of the city hold in common, says Charles E. Ashburner, city manager of Springfield, O., in the Town Development Magazine.

With a commission of five members elected at large and the city business in charge of a manager who is selected by the commission, the organization of a municipality resembles very closely that of a private corporation. One of the most noticeable features of this form of government is its simplicity, and the most attractive feature it presents is the possibilities for getting results that count, and getting them directly.

Under the commission manager form of government the people may have government either as good or bad as they desire. In the last analysis it rests with the people to decide as to the quality of service they shall receive from the people who run the public payroll. If they want first class service they have a nothing to hinder their getting it but their own failure to pick the right kind of commissioners.

Under the commission manager form of government there is no opportunity for the shifting of responsibility from the shoulders of one employee of the people to another. Each man has his work cut out for him, and if he is not the man for the position it will not take long to have this shown. The city manager form which hundred cents in each dollar paid him should be the man standard by which the qualifications of a public employee are judged and under the commission manager form of government this standard is absolutely necessary if the government is to provide anything like the results the people have a right to expect from it.

The duties of a city manager are numerous, but simple enough in character. A city manager is responsible to the commission. If it does its duty, will get a new contract. It is a monotonous life in any means. The duties of the office require that its occupant must be prepared to turn at a moment's notice from finance to engineering, from fields and and catch the gamblers and bootleggers to examine a sewer line, whereas at before were trying in different ways to accomplish the public good.

Want are some of the things done last winter a lecture course brought to Wilson entertainment and delightful evening which it would not have been possible to enjoy if manufacturers by any one of the organizations alone. Arrangements are being made for a tuberculosis to be held in October, the premium lists for which are even now being circulated. This federation committee is also planning to establish a completely equipped playground near the school building for the children. In short, whatever is to be done for the community interests will be done by this federated committee. It will do much more this year than last, for it has been organized but a short time. Wilson is setting a fine example of community spirit and endeavor for every rural town. That example should be followed.—J. W. Darrow.

THE WHITE FROCK

SIMPLE, YET DAINTILY CHIC.

Even Fine Robes May Be Trimmed With Imitation Laces or Fashioned From Embroidered Flouncings—Pin Tucking Is in Favor.

White frocks for the little folks are an important part of the summer wardrobe. Those sold in the shops are often wonderful creations, much of whose beauty depends on the exquisite handwork. The fond mother who has time may duplicate many of these gowns at a moderate cost.

Those who are in search of a specially attractive model will find the dress here illustrated here worth careful study. The garment may be fashioned of lawn, batiste or batist. It is adorned with tucks and lace and embroidery, and the lace and medallions are used. A dainty blue sash is drawn around the waist. Worn with white socks and tonies strap slippers, this makes a charming outfit for the little tot.

Use For Embroidered Flouncings.

Nothing is more satisfactory for children's white frocks than machine embroidered flouncings and bandings.

CHARLES E. ASHBURNER.

CHILDS WHITE FROCK

The double tuck skirt with a low waist such is a much fancied style, and has a little tucked low waist round rash. It is hard to keep such sashes from slipping down on the slender little figures. Hence the sash is run through slashes in the frock, but this fashion is far more frowned upon as the thinness sick of ribbon or velvet and lawn is not apparently with the business around the figure. Of course this model is something to hold the sash up.

Fine Frocks Are Costly.

When it comes to the exquisitely fine white frock, trimmed with lace and insertion embroidery and set together with tucks, the cost is quite another and rather extravagant amount or make up. The price of such a frock sometimes prefer to make it need be. Of course, if one is rich or well to do, buying the cheaper play frocks in quantity in the shops.

White frocks are, infinitely fine and sheer and cooling fit a yard, with never thickness and a fine handsewing, but there are many grades of fine batiste lawns, from 12 cents the yard up which are very satisfactory. Indestructible voile, sheer as gossamer, yet with a decided resistance to tearing, is a most fine and the excellent cotton of its threads is another favorite.

Imitation Laces Favored.

Hems, wide tucks and pin tucking are the favorite trimmings.

The favored laces are real or imitation bebab from 25 cents the yard and, also, allover or flat lace combinations of cotton and lace, or entirely lace. Wide tucks do not lend the satisfactorily enough for children's frocks that usually go to the tub every week.

For a power of the moment simple dresses are preferred to elaborate ones. After all, good taste distinct and clothes are the best and most effective. For everyday wear sensible dresses are favored. Any specialty frocks away and other quaint ideas are utilized by designers in search of inspiration.

Bake in a slow oven for 1½ hours. If wished, a little cinnamon may be added to the rhubarb. Serve with custard.

FARM PROBLEMS

Some Thoughts of Timely Interest by Mary W. Cole, Superintendent of the Bureau of Co-operation of the Department of Agriculture, New York.

The history of the growth and spread of the co-operative marketing idea in New York state is following almost exactly the same line as those abroad. While a great many people believed that co-operation offered the most feasible solution of many of the present day problems in connection with food distribution, both producer and consumer were very slow to realize that it could ever be toward in taking up the actual details of organizing co-operative associations.

The movement was given a new and powerful impetus by the words of Governor Hughes at the state national dairy meeting held at the conference in the executive chamber which followed. Previous to this addresses there were given upon the statute books which permitted the formation of these associations and subsequently that no great interest was taken. There were only four or five county co-operative companies doing business, since that speech of Governor Hughes there have all over the state have come to the bureau asking for information about co-operation and instruction in the formation of organizations. At present there are about twenty-five companies incorporated under the new law, and many more districts have expressed a desire to form these organizations.

The Federation of Jewish Farmers of America were really the pioneers in co-operative purchase of farm supplies and co-operative selling of farm products. Their experience has been in many instances very valuable in demonstrating the importance and necessity of organization.

Quite recently at Hurleyville, N. Y., a co-operative creamery has been established, and the butter and cheese manufactured there is to be supplied every day in New York city, where it will be delivered by special representatives of the creamery direct to the consumers' homes. This will insure to New York consumers strictly fresh dairy products, delivered not later than twenty-four hours after manufacture, and will save the unnecessary handling of these products by three or four individuals. This creamery handles also to market eggs in the same way. The local supply feature of this co-operative creamery is that it will share the profits of its operations with the producers. We will get at the end of the year 25 per cent of the profits of the creamery. It will also share the profits it will pay to the farmers, the producers, 25 per cent of the profits to preserve fund of the creamery.

The largest and most prominent of these co-operative associations are really industrials, with headquarters in Elmira, and have to do with farmers throughout Steuben county and has among its members some of the very best farmers in Steuben county. It has been instrumental in bringing its first year to furnish a large percentage of its dairy feed, and co-operative dairy and in its process during its first year to furnish a large percentage of its dairy feed,

THE GRANGE HALL.

Center of All Social Good Things and a Neighborhood Asset.

When the new hall is completed it is the pride of the neighborhood, and it is usually one of the best buildings for miles around. It is no object of pride and it should be so the neighborhood should be proud of it. Such a building may be a great blessing to a neighborhood. It may become a civic center, a sort of advanced school for the study of things of importance to all the community. In view of its importance such a hall ought to be just as large, just as convenient, just as well adapted to lodge purposes and general use, just as well heated and ventilated and kept just as clean and tidy, just as harmonious by painted or tinted or otherwise colored as the lodge rooms usually are possibly permit. It will be a neighborhood asset and will have just as much to do with improving realty values as the new schoolhouse or the church. It should be furnished with chairs or seats or cushioned stools, but, whatever you do, select furniture before buying that will be the permanent furniture, for, whether you do so decide or not, the chances are that the furniture you buy will be the permanent furniture. Or unless your hall is a great exception, having once begun to use a certain article, you will find it extremely inconvenient to make a change even if it is an undesired board. Hitting big a hall is the hardest job it will do for you. As an instance, the Patrons of Waterville recently remodeled their hall, put in a kitchen, sinks, lavatory, range, cupboards, dishes, tables for gentlemen and improved the main hall and they now have it in one almost every night in the week for lodge purposes and, of course, the grangers usually pay the bill. It pays them. The hall is now a source of income. Another instance—a new hall built several years ago furnished with seats, furniture, an old rusty stove, donations from the neighborhood of our lodge furniture and from various lodges, and there was not enough of anything to make a decent appearance. An invitation of 1912 would have made things look 100 per cent better. Five hundred dollars would have provided a good stove and seats and stools. But it was the only thing in the village, and the community thought it needed it. It drove out money, but the seats were not satisfactory, and a result it is now empty, and a new hall with good accommodations has all the patronage.

But there is something more to have than a place in addition to its being a money maker. The most influence of a new, even the most, with well lighted, ventilated, good dishes, a range, good tables and utensils are employed within reasonable limits and a janitor who will keep the hall well swept and dusted and in good condition but to be a real necessity. Try it and watch results.—Pardee Grange Bulletin.

NEW RURAL SCHOOL LAW.

New York Puts its Rural Schools on Same Plane as High Schools.

The best experience of the state of New York passed a rural school bill which has received the governor's signature and which will place rural school districts on a par in several important particulars with city schools. The general provisions of the law are to the effect that the commissioner of education may lay out districts of his own motion suitable for central high schools anywhere in the state at any time, and in these schools there shall be taught the studies usually pursued in village or city high schools as well as agriculture. These new school districts are to be laid out independently of the boundaries of existing school districts, towns or counties, and after a district has been laid out only those residing within the boundaries of the said district shall be permitted to vote on the proposition of establishing such a central high school. Fifteen taxpayers may call for a meeting at which a vote shall be taken as to whether such a school shall be established or not. If the vote be favorable the school shall be established, and the school district shall have all the privileges of a union school district. It will receive from the state the same money that the territory included in it received when divided into several districts and also the money made for high school instruction and for instruction in agriculture where such schools are maintained and instruction given.

This rural high school law is one of the most valuable acts of the state legislature for many years. It gives the country her old yet educational advantages at home equal to any they may have had in the past, with the added advantage of receiving instruction in the things with which they should be most familiar and with which a large majority of them will have to do in the future. These schools will also greatly tend to improve social conditions and will furnish models of buildings which will be attractive to the pupils and tend to build up a home pride in their home communities and in rural affairs.

These schools will be directly and solely under the control of the farmers or the district through a board of education chosen by themselves. They can make them what they will, and that they will make them such as to serve the interests of the farm and the locality wherein they are located, goes without saying. The general features of the plan of these schools have been approved by the commissioner of education at Washington, Ohio, we believe, has similar schools, and Minnesota, Massachusetts and Rhode Island are engaged in a movement looking to the establishment of these rural high schools. Let the work increase.

CITY MANAGER IN SPRINGFIELD

Commission Plan Works For Public Service.

A BUSINESS INSTITUTION.

A Noticeable Feature of This Form of Government is its Simplicity, and it Presents Possibilities For Telling Results That Count.

Under the commission manager plan of government a municipality is organized as a public service corporation, and its sole purpose is service. It is a business institution devoted to the interests which the inhabitants of the city hold in common, says Charles E. Ashburner, city manager of Springfield, O., in the Town Development Magazine.

With a commission of five members elected at large and the city business in charge of a manager who is selected by the commission, the organization of a municipality resembles very closely that of a private corporation. One of the most noticeable features of this form of government is its simplicity, and the most attractive feature it presents is its possibilities for getting results that count, and getting them directly.

Under the commission manager form of government the people may have government either as good or bad as they desire. In the last analysis it rests with the people to decide as to the quality of service they shall receive from the people upon the public payroll. If they want first class service there is nothing to hinder they getting it and it rests with the people to decide the right kind of commissioners.

Under the commission manager form of government there is no opportunity for the shifting of responsibility from the shoulders of one employee of the people to another. Each man has his work cut out for him, and it is a matter of the men for the position it will not take long to have this shown. The ability to step from one department to each dollar paid him should be the standard by which the qualifications of a public employee are judged, and under the commission manager form of government this standard is absolute, because if the government is to be operated on the business basis the people have a right to expect from it.

The duties of a city manager are numerous, but simple enough in character. A city manager must get results or the commission, if it does its duty, will get a new manager. It is not a unusuous life by any means. The duties of the office require that its occupant must be unreserved to turn at a moment's notice from finance to engineering, from dealing fire and fighting gamblers and bootleggers to cleaning streets, from garbage to water work from matters of the utmost importance to matters of minute importance and back again and be prepared to handle anything and everything that comes along. And he must also be able to sleep well at night, or those good nerves of steel and smile regardless of any one who does not the same. Arrangements are being made for a federation fair to be held in October, the premium lists for which are even now being circulated. This federation committee is also planning to establish a completely equipped playground near the school building for the children. In short, whatever is to be done for the community interests will be done by this federated committee. It will do much more this year than last, for it has been organized but a short time. Wilson is setting a fine example of community spirit and endeavor for every rural town. That example should be followed.—J. W. Darrow.

THE WHITE FROCK

White frocks for the little folks are an important part of the summer wardrobe. Those sold in the shops are often wonderful creations made of wonderfully depends on the exquisite handwork. The fond mother who has time may duplicate many of these gowns at a moderate cost.

Those who are in search of a specialty attractive model will find the little girl's dress illustrated here worth copying. The garment may be fashioned of lawn, batiste or linen. It is adorned with both lace and embroidery. Valenciennes lace and medallions are used. A dainty blue sash is drawn around the waist. Worn with white socks and button strap slippers, this makes a charming outfit for the little tot.

Use For Embroidered Flounings.

CHILD'S WHITE FROCK.

The double tucks skirt with a low placed sash is a much fancied style. And just a hint about this low placed sash. It is not to be long sash suitable for slipping down on the slender little figure under the clothes. It is through slashes in the frock, but this fashion is not so much favored now as the fashionable waist line is observed lightly and apparently with caressing tenderness for the dear. If there must be something to hold that sash up.

Fine Frocks Are Costly.

When it comes to the exquisitely fine dresses, the dainty lawn and lace and machine embroidery and set together with hand stitchery, one must pay a high extravagant price, and make the frock at home, and such frocks indeed never do be solo, if need be, buying the cheaper play frocks in quantity to the show.

White Paris muslin, infinitely fine and sheer and costing $1 a yard, will cover "thicker off" in the immortal lot there are many grades of fine white muslin from 25 cents the yard up which are very satisfactory. Indestructible voile, sheer as gossamer, yet sturdy in character because of its beautiful weave and the excellent cotton of which it is woven.

Imitation Lace Favored.

Hems, with the tucks and pin tucking are put in with hand stitches.

The favored lace are real or imitation Irish, Cluny, Brussels lace for children, and shadow or dotted lace comes with every one dress of cut or fine muslin lace. Wide tuks do not lacking for embroidery enough for children's frocks that must go to the tub every week.

Yet a dress of the most simple design are preferred to elaborate ones. Arrangements are being made for a dress parade such as should not be overelaborate. For parade day were sensible linens are favored. Kate Greenaway and other quaint ideas are utilized by designers in search of inspiration.

RHUBARB CHARLOTTE.

Butter a pie dish, melt a dessertspoonful of butter in it, add a few with a little water and pour this in. Now cut a slice of bread and butter, thin a layer of finely sliced rhubarb, a little sugar, and so on, filling dish till dish is full. Beat up an egg and pour over it, if wheat is not meant to be turned out. If liquid is not wanted, beat up an egg with a little milk and pour it. Cover the topmost layer with a generous pat of butter. Bake in a moderate oven for half an hour. Turn out, sprinkle with sugar and serve with cream.

SYNOPSIS.

John Valiant, a rich society favorite with the Virginia Valiants of Virginia, which his father founded and worked up from a small farm, and wounded, private fortune to the greatest tobacco combine in the world, is called home from his bachelor life in Washington by the illness of his father, Colonel Tucker Valiant, who, in his history court, he meets Shirley Dandridge, a girl he had known in the days that he spent in Washington. Mrs. Hand, Shirley's mother, asks John to take her daughter to a party given by the Misses Tucker, John's sisters, and he does so. Shirley is a "sensation" at the party, and John is proud of her. Colonel Tucker, on his death bed, tells John that he had produced a living heir, and John promises to care for the child. Shirley visits John's home, and he takes her to a "hoe down" at the Negro quarters. Shirley has her mother, of the Shirley family, come to live with her at the Valiant home in Washington. John is in the history court.

The major smiled. "Ah, yes," he said. "The Continental prison-camp."

"And just over this rise there I can see an old court house, and the Virginia Assembly balting under the trees—lambasting at loan-office speculators! Patrick Henry, I see a messenger galloping up and see the members assemble in their saddles—and there, Tarleton and his dragoons streaming up, too, also."

"Well," commented the doctor deliberately, "all I have to say is, don't materialize too much to Mrs. Foly Clifford when you meet her. She'd have you lecturing to the Ladies' Church Guild before you know it."

"I hope you do, Mr. Valiant!" the latter added pleasantly.

"I'm fond of it," said Valiant, "but I have no horse as yet."

"I was thinking," pursued the major, "of the coming tournament."

"Tournament?"

The doctor cut in. "A ridiculous neck-a-doodle-do which gives the young bucks a chance to rig out in silly toggery and prance their colts before a lot of politicians!"

"It's an annual affair," explained the major; "a kind of spectacle. For many years, by the way, it has been held on a part of this estate—perhaps you will have no objection to its use this season?—and at night there is a dance at the Country Club. By the way, you must let me introduce you there—tomorrow; I've taken the liberty already of putting your name up."

"Good lord!" growled the doctor, aside. "He counts himself young! If I'd reached your age, Brisbow—"

"You bet," said the major, settled. "Four years ago!—As I was saying, Mr. Valiant, they ride for a prize. It's a very ancient thing—I've seen references to it in a manuscript I found in the Bird Library at Westover. No doubt it's come down directly from the old jousts."

"You don't mean to say," cried his hearer in positive astonishment, "that Virginia has a liberal descendant of the tourney?"

The major nodded. "Yes. Certain sections of Kentucky used to have it, too; but it has died out there. It exists now only in this state. It's a curious thing that the old knightly mustings of the middle ages should survive today only on American soil and in a corner of Virginia."

"Twice blest!" meanwhile had set his gaze on the litter of pamphlets. He turned with an appreciative eye. "You're beginning in earnest. The Agricultural Department. And the Conservation fanatic."

"I'm afraid I'm a sad sketch as a scientist," laugh Valiant. "My point of view has to be a somewhat unscientific one. I want to see everything Tucker Court is a day estate. It has grain fields and forest as well. If my ancestors lived from it, I can. It's not only that," he went on more quickly, "I want to make the most of the place for its own sake, too. Not only of its possibilities for carnival, but of its natural beauties. I lack the seemliness I know had, but I can give it thought and work, and I'm going to bring Tucker Court back to anything even remotely resembling what it once was. I'll not spare either."

The major wrote his name and wave the doctor's face showed a grim, if transient approval. "I believe you'll do it!" exclaimed the former. And let me say aloh, that the neighborhood is not unaware of the splendid generosity which is responsible for the present relief of which you speak."

Valiant put out his hand with a little gesture of deprecation, but the other disregarded it. "Confound it, sah, it was to be expected of a Valiant. Your ancestors wrote their names in capital letters over this country. They were an up and down lot, but good or bad—I said, as football says, I reckon"—he nodded toward the great portrait above the couch—"they weren't all little woolly lambs! they did big things in a big way."

Valiant leaned forward eagerly, a question on his lips. But at the moment a diversion occurred in the shape of Uncle Jefferson, who reappeared bearing a tray on which set some dry jags and clinking glasses, glowing with white and green and gold.

"You old humbug," said the doctor, "don't you know the majors this side wound with mint-julep attends that he can't get up before sight in the morning."

"Well, sah," uttered Uncle Jefferson, "Ah done frum yer mint-julep down below de kitchens dis mawnin'. Yo' ole gal done 'bout de biggest sprinkle in dis yeah country, sah. Ah reckin Marse Valiant also set on yo' sampling ut."

"Bah," said the major frostingly, turning to his host, "I'm proud to think your health in the typical beverage of Virginia!" He touched glasses with Valiant and glared at the doctor, who was slipping his own thoughtfully. "Poems have been written on the julep, sah."

"They make good epitaphs, too," observed the doctor.

"I noticed your glass isn't going begging," he made pointedly. "Uncle Jefferson, that's as good mint as grew in the gardens of Eden. See that those lazy niggers of yours don't grub up the earth out by mistake."

"Tsa, sah," said Uncle Jefferson, as he retired with the tray. "Ah gwine ter pot er fence erroun' dat ar bed in sundown."

The question that had sprung to Valiant's lips now found utterance. "I saw you look at the portrait there," he said to the major. "Which of my ancestors is it?"

The other got up and stood before the mantel-piece in a Napoleonic attitude. "That," he said, tilting his eyeglasses, "is your great-grandfather, Devil-John Valiant."

"Devil-John!" echoed his host. "Yes, I've heard the name."

The doctor guffawed. "He earned it, I reckon. I never realized what a sinister expression that leaning optic gives the old ruffian. There was a skirmish during the war on the hillside yonder and a bullet, cut it out, sah."

The Other Got Up and Stood Before the Mantel-Piece in a Napoleonic Attitude.

When we were boys we used to call him 'Old One-Eye.'"

"It interests me enormously," John Valiant spoke explosively.

"The stories of Devil-John would fill a mighty fine book," said the major; "by all accounts he ought to have lived in the middle ages." Crossing the library, he stood into the mirror portrait over the mantle. Here is his father, who was never known to have had any sense of humor, but who was a shrewd, hard, practical man, who knew how to make the most of the place for its own sake, too. Not only of its possibilities for carnival, but of its natural beauties. I lack the seemliness I know had, but I can give it thought and work, and I'm going to bring Tucker Court back to anything even remotely resembling what it once was. I'll not spare either."

Western Michigan

A Region that is Rapidly Developing as a Fruit Growing and General Farming Section

ALFALFA FIELD IN BENZIE COUNTY.

Among the speakers who helped to make the Benzie county alfalfa campaign a success last August was Dr Eben Mumford, leader for the federal extension work in Michigan. The above view shows Dr. Mumford inspecting the Sam Willis alfalfa field near Thompsonville along with Mr. Willis and E. M. Dean, the Thompsonville banker. The alfalfa had just been cut for the second time. Eight alfalfa clubs were formed during the campaign.

GREAT YEAR FOR WESTERN MICHIGAN

The year 1914 promises much for western Michigan in the way of factory development. Of course many hundreds of acres of new ground will be started and many new farms will be opened, but work will be the basis for a different kind of development, a kind which follows the wake of farm development, viz., factory development.

At the present time eight western Michigan villages are figuring on the establishment of canning stations for the reception of cucumbers, which will eventually be converted into pickles. From 100 to 200 acres of cucumber acreage is needed for each station. Taking the minimum figure, with eight canning stations established, there will be no less than 800 acres devoted to cucumbers this season, where formerly some other crop was grown. The eight villages are Arcadia, Empire, Hesley, Pentwater, Beulah, Brandon, Kingsley and Kalkaska. There are probably others, but these have announced to the world that they propose to be in the cucumber business in 1914.

At four villages in western Michigan factories based upon the dairy industry will be established. These factories will be either for the making of butter or cheese, or for the reception of cream for shipment to larger factories. The four places are Sidney, Buckley, Dogansville and Freesoil.

Four towns also hope to get canning factories that call for vegetables and fruits that are being grown upon the farms. These are Ludington, Scottville, Interlochen, Montague and Wexford. The Canovia plant will be called an evaporator which, like the other three will be of the ordinary type.

Hopes City has secured a piano factory, and is loudly proclaiming that "this institution is not dependent upon the agricultural industry for its raw material, but it does figure that the increasing prosperity which is coming to the farmers of western Michigan is going to help absorb this product.

So many new industries call for more machinery for facilitating trade, and so many requests have been made that banks will be established this year at Rapid City, Crystal Valley and Grant.

Prospects for the potato crop in these sections have had to keep their money in an old stocking. The "M" tubers under the apple tree, or travel a considerable distance to find a market. In addition, most of the banks in the western Michigan country report a big increase in deposits.

Two western Michigan cities, Holland and Traverse City, have had their post offices promoted since the first of the year, into the first class, the business of the city amounting to over $40,000 for the year ending March 31.

All of the above are but straws, which show the direction of the wind. The wind is coming, and give an ear you to secure it is going. Fruit growers are now realizing to a degree that the development now taking place in western Michigan is of the most substantial kind and that it will continue long beyond the lifetime of anyone now living.

Sun Favors Michigan

Western Michigan has many climatic advantages over the states of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois to the south. One of these is the greater number of hours of sunshine allotted the growing crop for the growing season. This is because of the very fact that the sunshine figures show that during the six months from April 1 to October 1, the people of Lenox, Western Michigan, get 673 more hours of sunshine than do those living in Columbus, Ohio; Indianapolis, Ind.; or Springfield, Ill. These three southern cities are all very close to the fortieth parallel of latitude, while Leland Mich., is very close to the forty-fifth.

The exact number of hours of sunshine for each point for each month is as shown by the following table.

Month.	Columbus, Springfield.	Indianapolis.	Difference Favorina Leland.
April	398.6	405.2	6.6
May	446.2	460.7	14.5
June	445.9	466.6	17.7
July	455.2	471.7	16.5
August	426.1	439.2	13.1
September..	372.5	375.8	3.3
Total ...	2,547.5	2,618.4	67.9

The significance of the above figures is found in the fact that sunshine is one of the most important factors in the reception of cucumbers, which will eventually be converted into pickles. From 100 to 200 acres of cucumber acreage is needed for each station.

Taking the minimum figure, with eight canning stations established, there will be no less than 800 acres devoted to cucumbers this season, where formerly some other crop was grown. The eight villages are Arcadia, Empire, Hesley, Pentwater, Beulah, Brandon, Kingsley and Kalkaska. There are probably others, but these have announced to the world that they propose to be in the cucumber business in 1914.

Handling the Bull.

The bull undoubtedly and sometimes, but only one thing, and that is brute force. Put a ring in his nose when he is young, and give him to understand that you are the boss of the ranch, and not he, and he will be good to use his horns and to depend upon them, doubtful if he will be good, but never abuse him, but let him know always and everywhere that you are on the spot, that you are the supreme, and that peace between you and him depends on his good behavior.

Cultivating Pear Trees.

Pear trees should have little cultivation until they begin bearing. Cultivation and enriching the ground favor blight. The best varieties are more liable to blight than those of coarser quality.

For Finest Pickles.

The large varieties of the cucumber which grow to small small make the finest pickles but do not bear half so many bushels as varieties like the Early Cluster.

Big Seed Warehouse in Charlevoix County.

By H. J. DANIELS.

Although fruit growing and its allied industries have obtained the strongest foothold in western and northern Michigan, and in the main offer the greatest opportunity for expansion, the growing of seeds for the several great seed companies shows the most phenomenal growth. Many of the seed concerns have branches scattered throughout the northwest portion of the state, others have forces of men always on the lookout for acreage and are but awaiting the day of securing sufficient acreage to establish branches, while still others are, in view of future action, are looking the country over and investigating the resources.

One company alone, at one of its branch warehouses, handled stored in one season 50,000 bushels of pea seeds. Another firm, when did not believe it could secure sufficient acreage for its needs, closed up and planted last spring 4,000 acres of the same vegetable.

Clover seed, too, grows to great advantage on the sandy plains of the south and northwest. There are records of men, who, buying such land sometimes at prices less than $10 an acre, have seeded down the tree in clover seed enough to pay for their land and clear up a handsome profit by the time they had gone through growing their living. Plains-grown clover seed, because of its purity and freedom from weed seeds, and because of the exceeding cleanness of its seeds, has practically necessitated the establishing of a new grading superior to those in Toledo, the clover seed market of the United States.

Beans, corn, potatoes—almost any variety of grain or tuber does equally as well, and finds the same demand. By actual test, in widely separated communities, under most diverse conditions, the seed companies have demonstrated to their entire satisfaction that northern grown seeds will, when planted in Indiana, Ohio, Tennessee, Texas, Florida or Louisiana, germinate and mature more quickly than seeds grown in the south. Radish seed grown in the south, Radish seed grown in Michigan, for instance, will germinate and mature in a week earlier than those grown from southern seed, while corn when planted that call for ninety days in the south require but ninety days in the north.

Seeds, like potatoes, when they are of sufficient size, are not subject to blighting influences as to the proper method of marketing their crops.

CUCUMBERS AS CASH CROPS.

The growing of cucumbers under contract for the various pickling stations in several sections of the state is being advanced as a cash crop by many farmers throughout the state who speak from a profitable experience.

The advantage of growing cucumbers is that the picking season comes after the grain harvest and before the corn time—generally a slack time on the average farm. Until picking time there is very little expense, and that is the chief expense. A large crop does not always mean a profit, but they are contracted for at a guaranteed price.

The cucumber thrives best on clay or sandy loam well supplied with humus or decayed vegetable matter, if the land can be treated with a commercial fertilizer analyzing about twenty per cent nitrogen, ten per cent phosphoric acid and ten per cent potash. For extra good results one pounds to the acre should be used about a week before planting time.

The seed is usually furnished by the salters at a low figure and it requires about a pound to the acre. They should be planted in hills a little more than four feet apart and 15 seeds to the hill, and before the vines of the soil pressed firmly down on them. After the danger of insects is passed the plants should be thinned out to three in a hill. The time to plant cucumbers in most parts of Michigan is about June 10.

AROUSES ENTHUSIASM.

The fruit growers of western Michigan are becoming enthusiastic over pear culture, as evidenced by notes received and giving trees especial care for the purpose of exhibiting at the annual meeting of fruit for exhibition at the Grand Rapids meeting. For some time there have been rumors that the women were disinterested with the service in their dining hall. There was no show of militancy and the faculty was not aware of the action until they saw the vacant dining room. In the afternoon a committee of six met President Snyder. The "mediators" were four seniors, Misses Gertrude Wickens, Alice Brimmer, Mae Hartlett and Lucille Tuss, and two juniors, Misses Evelyn Harbottle and Isabel Lamb, the latter two being from Detroit. They received no definite promises from the faculty, but as the fault was found in the methods of the kitchen affairs and the cook turned in her resignation when the trouble occurred, it is probable that matters will be smoothed out. All returned to the boarding club for dinner and Dean Wells of the women's department is of the opinion that the affair will be settled without further difficulty.

Port Huron.—The will of the late Mrs Margaret A. Blackwell of Grant township discloses the fact that she did not want her husband, Gilbert Blackwell, to share in her estate. This clause appears in her will: "To my husband, Gilbert Blackwell, I give the sum of $1, he having abused my dollar my lifetime. The woman bequeathed her estate to her sons and daughters.

Pontiac.—Patrolman Cooley was asked to tender his resignation to the police department. If he resigns he will be the third policeman to leave within the last two weeks.

Bay City.—A violent electrical storm, accompanied by a wind of cyclonic proportions, swept here. Several thousand dollars damage resulted, many plate glass windows being broken, trees and wires blown down. The residence of Capt. Joseph Archambeau of the fire department was blown over. Eight downtown stores had windows smashed.

FARMERS AT FAULT.

C. K. Bassett of the market department of agriculture at Washington addressed a body of farmers at Owosso recently and told them that the farmer is responsible for the fact that the unsatisfactory condition of the bean market today. Dumping the entire bean crop on the market in the fall, which records show has often been the habit of Michigan farmers, is blamed by Mr. Bassett for the bad conditions.

The market department is making an investigation all over the country for the purpose of seeing who is with a view of alleviating unsatisfactory conditions. In Michigan the farmers believe they are not getting enough for the beans, while the consumers think they are being compelled to pay too much for them. It was for the purpose of seeing who is right that the market department sent Mr. Bassett out.

The record of one large bean job bling house in Michigan for the past five years was submitted at the meeting. It showed that practically all the bean crop was put away in bulk in the fall. The practice of marketing nearly all of the bean crop in two months, it takes 12 months to consume it, is wrong Mr. Bassett told the gathering. The beans should be placed on the market in quantities proportionate to the immediate demand. Mr. Bassett said he would go back to Washington, make his report, and if it was deemed advisable by the head of the department a man would be sent to Michigan to remain several weeks and give advice of marketing farmers as to the proper method of marketing their crops.

Louis Sands Lumber Company's Plant at Manistee, Mich.

The suspension of a large part of its operations since August of the H. C. Peters' Salt & Lumber company at Manistee, marks a scene as that in the accompanying picture will have a dismal setting for many years to come. For a long time, there, leaves the Louis Sands Lumber company one of the largest operators there, or, indeed, in Michigan. Mr. Sands has large holdings in Manistee and Wexford counties and will be able to run for a considerable length of time, but will be closed out finally at about the time the lumbermen in Wexford county are cutting their last pieces of AGRICULTURE MAKES STRIDES IN WEXFORD COUNTY.

Wexford County Alfalfa Campaigners.

Wexford county is one of the comparatively new counties in Michigan, yet exports traveling through its territory are greatly surprised at the evidences of agricultural progress there. In alfalfa campaigns has just been closed in which agricultural colleges experts, the state and Michigan, county school commissioners and county agricultural agents, and other prominent men of the county, have been active in the campaign. The horsing has just been closed in which agricultural colleges experts, the state and Michigan, county school commissioners and county agricultural agents, and other prominent men of the county, have been active in the campaign. The results are astonishing. Hundreds of acres of alfalfa, growing, and alfalfa, seeded down, are being shown to visitors at that, grown according to scientific methods. The sponsors said they had seen more alfalfa fields in traveling from Manton to Mesick, a distance of but 12 miles, than in any other county in the state.

At several places along the way there were good fine fields of alfalfa on both sides of the road. To the great surprise of the visitors they found the farming territory pretty well settled up. They found substantial farm houses, large barns, windmills, silos and old orchards. The road, a greater part of the distance, was in good condition and made traveling pleasant as well as rapid throughout the campaign.

MICHIGAN RANKS HIGH.

Do you know that Michigan ranks high among the states in the value of her annual crop of farm land yielding first, second or third in many important crops? The state is noted because of its generous annual production and the unsurpassed variety of its products. The horticultural interests have long given her a position of national importance. Of late, due to the fact it is an important fact that the possibilities for future development are very great for as cut only one crop out of the total land area is included in farms with enormous areas of good soil remaining to be reclaimed.

SETS OUT DEWBERRY PLANTS.

Luther Hodges, of near Dowagiac, has set out two acres of dewberry plants on the east side of the river. Lakes of the two beautiful bodies known as Diamond Lake and Indian Lake have power for irrigating the plants when needed.

A gasoline engine will furnish the power.

BARBER TURNS SCALPS.

There is an interesting account in connection with the introduction of a four-year course in agriculture in the high school curriculum in the village of Manton, Wexford county. It is said that one of the barbers in Manton turned the scales when the subject was under discussion by the school authorities. There were those who questioned the wisdom of introducing scientific methods and practical work into the school. The barber, however, whose name is George Russell, is a graduate of a school near his home and had tried scientific methods upon his all fields and on the orchards of the village, and the results had been so wonderful that there could be no question about scientific methods inasmuch as his alfalfa was considerably better than those of his neighbors who had not tried scientific methods. Thereupon the school board voted for a course of agriculture.

Exercise is a great egg tonic.

Wolverine News Brevities

Ann Arbor.—The Vulcans, senior engineering society, initiated ten Neophytes. Those honored were: James Bayneford, Highland Park; Frank Sheehy, Yale; Walter Kurtz, Saginaw; Willard Kinney, Dowagiac; John Bateman, Sault Ste. Marie; Burton Hood, Erie, Pa.; Oliver W. Hall, Denver, Colo.; Walter Stewart, Detroit; Charles Barton, Louisville, Ky.; Arthur Griffin, Bidgewood, N. J.

Detroit.—Capt. James B. Murdock and four of a crew of 11 men who escaped when the wooden steamer Emma E. Thompson burned to the water's edge in Georgian bay have reached Detroit. The first news of the disaster to reach Detroit was given out by the captain. The fire was discovered about daylight and spread so rapidly that members of the crew had no time to save their belongings. All hands tumbled into the lifeboat and a few hours later were picked up by the passenger steamer Germanic. They were landed at Owen Sound, Ont.

Saginaw.—W. A. Garrett, chief executive of the Good Fore Margaretta, addressed the members of the board of trade at the last luncheon of the year, pleading for the get-together spirit of the Michigan people to help the Fore Marquette out of its present trouble and declaring that the road was in such a comparatively financial condition that an increase in freight rates was necessary to put it on a substantial footing. With Mr. Garrett were F. W. Blair, F. E. Wolfenden, C. M. Hoeft, A. Post, James H. O. Hatlaski, Detroit, and several local officials.

Lansing.—The fast night mail on the Ann Arbor City division of the Michigan Central was wrecked at Eden, 17 miles north of Lansing. With the exception of the engine and tender the entire train left the track, it split into three sections and tumbled quarter way over. Outside of a few bruises not a passenger was hurt, and the railroad men are singing the praises of the engineer, who, coming through Eden at 40 miles an hour the front truck of the express ran off the track. The car pulled away from the engine and tender and took the rest of the train with it. The heavy Pullmans at the rear were equipped with emergency brakes, and when wrecked, with the result that the coaches stopped within a few car lengths, probably averting serious loss of passengers. The day coaches stood kept rushing along on the line for a couple of hundred yards and then toppled over.

Ann Arbor.—Despite the fact that a terrific thunderstorm of rain which lasted more than an hour disappeared the great mass of humanity in the Sleepy Hollow in readiness for cap night ceremony, about a thousand freshmen and their lower classmen of upper classmen, to say nothing of a large "Yipi" representation and a couple of thousand townspeople, marched the length of Sleepy Hollow to the annual celebration in which the freshmen burn their caps and become sophomores. Speeches were made by Dean Effinger of the literary department and Prof. Evan Holbrook of the law faculty, while student speakers were Frank Murphy of Harbor Beach, Patrick Koontz of Charleston, S. C., George Patterson of Detroit and Harold Hulbert of Oak Park, Ill. Louis Haller, Kansas City, Mo., was master of ceremonies and both the glee club and the varsity band furnished music. After the celebration the former freshmen were given a bonfire and enjoyed a brief theater.

East Lansing.—The entire body of Michigan Agricultural college co-eds refused to eat the luncheon served to them at the annual feast, and supplanted it with the fare at East Lansing restaurant. For some time there have been rumors that the women were discontented with the service in their dining hall. There was no show of militancy and the faculty was not aware of the action until they saw the vacant dining room. In the afternoon a committee of six met President Snyder. The "mediators" were four seniors, Misses Gertrude Wickens, Alice Brimmer, Mae Hartlett and Lucille Tuss, and two juniors, Misses Evelyn Harbottle and Isabel Lamb, the latter two being from Detroit. They received no definite promises from the faculty, but as the fault was found in the methods of the kitchen affairs and the cook turned in her resignation when the trouble occurred, it is probable that matters will be smoothed out. All returned to the boarding club for dinner and Dean Wells of the women's department is of the opinion that the affair will be settled without further difficulty.

Port Huron.—The will of the late Mrs Margaret A. Blackwell of Grant township discloses the fact that she did not want her husband, Gilbert Blackwell, to share in her estate. This clause appears in her will: "To my husband, Gilbert Blackwell, I give the sum of $1, he having abused my dollar my lifetime. The woman bequeathed her estate to her sons and daughters.

Pontiac.—Patrolman Cooley was asked to tender his resignation to the police department. If he resigns he will be the third policeman to leave within the last two weeks.

Bay City.—A violent electrical storm, accompanied by a wind of cyclonic proportions, swept here. Several thousand dollars damage resulted, many plate glass windows being broken, trees and wires blown down. The residence of Capt. Joseph Archambeau of the fire department was blown over. Eight downtown stores had windows smashed.

PROBLEM FOR THE MAIDENS

In Hot Weather Will They Have to Come to Coslouna Somewhat Resembling Eve's?

Jerome B. McWade, the wealthy Duluth connoisseur, said at a recent dinner:

"I spent the winter on the Riviera. The winter fashions were really startling—shocking, that is, to Coustock minds. Nothing shocks me.

"But in the evening, at the Nice County club dances, young girls would wear sleeveless gowns that left the back quite bare from the waist up. They could say truly—ha, ha, ha!—that they hadn't a stitch to their backs, eh? And in the afternoon at the dansants young girls would wear gowns that were either sleeved to the knee, or else that were—a still sulter device—transparent to the knee, permitting the slim and silken limb to gloom through a panel of lace or tulle.

"A western millionaire at the Negresco, in Nice, on seeing his three daughters in gowns of this radical type, gave a loud laugh one day last winter and said:

"'By Bingo, girls, what will you have off when the hot weather comes?'—New York Tribune.

SCALP ITCHED AND BURNED

852 South Belsoto St., Circleville, Ohio.—My little girl's trouble first started on her head in a bunch of little pimples full of yellow-looking matter and they spread in large places. In a short time they would crack and the skin was awfully red and inflamed and the burning and itching were so intense that we would scratch and rub till it would leave sore spots. The sores also appeared on her body, and her clothing irritated them so that I had to put real soft cloth next to her body. She would be awake of nights and was very worrisome. At times she was tortured with itching and burning.

I tried different remedies with no benefit for several months. I had given up all hope of her ever getting rid of it, then I noticed in an advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. The second application she used in Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free with 32-p. Skin book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

Poetry and Pay.

Poetry, it is declared, is about the worst paid form of writing. Just now it runs neck-and-neck with the profession of drillers and vests, but the main evil can get a room, one of his system should feel that he is pretty well paid for his effort, and that is about.

Boyne City Journal: Yesterday morning at Lake Louis Mission an old resident and pioneer of this section passed away. He was seventy-eight years of age and has been ever of robust health for some time, death being caused by cancer of the stomach. A few weeks ago he was taken to the home of his son, Bert, at the corner of Michigan avenue and Lake street, where the end came. Besides a number of grandchildren he leaves a daughter, Mrs. Nelson, of this city, and two sons, Bert of this city, and Edward of Bellingham, Washington.

WEST MICHIGAN BEST FOR BEANS

E. L. Wellman, Prominent Shipper Says Bean Diseases Less Prevalent Here.

E. L. Wellman, with offices in the Murray building, one of the leading bean men in Michigan, says the Grand Rapids Herald, is pleased with the efforts of Congressman Cramton to have department of agriculture send experts into Michigan this summer to study into the bean raising industry. Two good things will result, he says. One will be the bettering of the cultural and marketing conditions, the other the prevention of bean diseases. Two bean diseases, known as anthracnose and blight, are common in Michigan, but most common where the soil is heavy and the moisture remains on top of the ground instead of going into the soil as it does in western and northern Michigan. Ways to prevent these diseases will be studied, and a discovery will mean hundreds of thousands of dollars annually to bean men of the state.

Mr. Wellman believes the estimate that there was a $2,000,000 loss last year from diseased beans in this state is at least 50 per cent too high, which, however, is plenty, he says. That the bean industry is gradually growing in Michigan is sure, and that the lighter soil of western and northern Michigan is better for beans than the heavier soil is evident from the fact that the increase in acreage year by year is greater in the western part of the state than in the eastern. Blighted beans are less common in this part of the state than in any other.

Commercial fertilizer has been received from 3 of the big fertilizer houses of the country, and is now being used beneath apple trees in the Western Michigan orchards that give promise of producing extra fine crops this year. The trees are being marked and a record is being kept of the entire work, that the exact benefits derived from the use of the fertilizer may be known. If extra fine apples are produced, as expected, these will be used for exhibits planned in behalf of the advertisement of the Western Michigan country.

Elk Rapids Progress: Jake Colman discovered a nest of the wild Mallard duck at Mequon Point and carefully lifted the nest with its ten eggs and placed them under a sitting hen. In due time ten little brown beauties were hatched and are now thriving under a coupe and the care of their foster mother, who seems to take a wonder upon the peculiar shape of her babies. When grown and tamed, it may will be, they will be set afloat in the waters at the point, and we bet a bottle anyone who molests them. They will be a great attraction.

Bellaire Independent: Ira A. Adams purchased in Elk Rapids last week an old bedroom outfit which dates back almost to revolutionary times. There are four pieces, a bedstead, dresser, chiffonier and commode, built of best walnut in a massive yet particularly handsome design. Mr. Adams has a hobby for antique furniture and is highly pleased with this new acquisition.

Who Banks Your Earnings!

Somebody does. If you are letting it all slip away from you, a certain portion of it is being banked by the various people to whom you pay it. This is hardly fair to yourself, after you work for your money. It will repay the compliment by working for you if you will but give it the opportunity.

Save a portion of your earnings; keep in mind the beginnings of the big men of business whom you are prone to envy, thinking they have a substantial bank account, without realizing they began without capital but a strong will and an inflexible purpose.

For instance, John Wanamaker began as errand boy at $1.50 a week in a dry goods store. He saved $300—enough to start a modest business of his own. MORAL—Bank your own money.

A boundless rain came Sunday and it brought up the vegetation briskly and will add greatly to the bank account after the harvest. It came just as it was needed most. It insures a bumper crop of hay and grain and gives the corn and potatoes a start that will take both well past the danger point of a summer drouth. Incidentally it will make strawberries a record crop.

Editor Vaughn, of the St. Johns Republican, has attended the recent republican banquet here, has his following to say in his paper: "Charlevoix is one of the prettiest spots in Michigan—a delightful place to visit at any time, and especially so in summer. VEGA'S LOSS CONFIRMED

Portions of Cabin Found on Beach Identifies Vega as Lost Boat

The steamer Beaver arriving from Beaver Island last Thursday night brought a charred piece of cabin wood that was unmistakably identified as a part of the gasoline boat Vega, burned off Beaver Island last Monday afternoon, with the loss of three men.

Jerry Yettaw, who was half owner of the boat, was not a practical boatman, and he employed Heath to navigate the craft across. Just before starting Papineau was taken on board for the trip.

Yettaw was a son of Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Yettaw, pioneers of Antrim county, now residents of Central Lake. Papineau was a son of the late John Papineau, who settled here in the fifties. Heath's parents reside elsewhere, but his mother is connected with a pioneer Beaver Island family.

On Friday two caps were found on the beach near the head of the island which were identified as having been worn by Heath and Papineau.

One of the island fish tugs passing in the vicinity of the disaster reports seeing a spot of oil on the surface of the lake, and set a buoy to mark the spot. It is thought that the oil was so recent from the sunken wreck. An effort will be made to locate it, and a diver may be sent there.

The Only Chance to Win.

Chase S. Osborn has made definite answer to parties who urged him to accept the republican nomination for the gubernatorial nomination.

In an open letter to the people of the State he, with his usual frankness and sincerity, swings into line with the party which once slected him to the office of governor, and pledges himself to go into the campaign with same vigor and intensity of purpose that character ized his canvass four years ago.

Chase S. Osborn never sought office. Two years ago he could have had a second but for his pre-election pledge that he would not be a candidate for a second consecutive term, and it is only at the widespread demand of republicans that he has consented to again become a candidate.

Chase S. Osborn is the only man who can receive the republican party to the control of State affairs. The record of his work as governor of Michigan will bear the closest scrutiny and challenge the criticism of the most exacting critics.

Chase S. Osborn is the greatest governor Michigan ever had, and he is better equipped than ever to render the State distinguished service.

WEDDING BELLS

Another Couple of Charlevoix Young People Enter State of Matrimony

A joyful event was that which occurred Tuesday evening at the home of Mrs. H. L. Iddings, on Antrim street, when Mr. Geo. A. Crouter was united in marriage with Miss Dorothy Wilhelmina Iddings. Rev. Quinton Walker performed the ceremony, preceding which "The Dawn" was sung by Mrs. James Gaston, sister of the bride.

The bridal couple entered to the strains of the wedding march from Lohengrin, sung by a quartette composed of Miss Irene Finucen, Mrs. Immel Gaskill and Messrs Frank and Allan Wilkinson. Following the ceremony Miss Nina Bennett sang "Be Thou Faithful" accompanied by Miss Malvina Muller.

The room was attractively decorated in green, with pink and white peonies. The bridal gown was of white crepe meteor, beneath a shower effect of rose buds and valley lillies. The bride was given away by her uncle, Mr. Chas. Gale of Calumet.

The maid of honor was Miss Hermina Iddings, sister of the bride, the bridesmaid Miss Irene Harsha; ribbon bearers Miss Clara Wilkinson and Master Richard Everett Hall, young cousin of the bride; ring bearer, Master Frank Waterman, carrying ring in white rosebud. The groom's attendant was Mr. Hugo Hass.

Out of town guests were Mrs. Chas. Shepard, of Benton Harbor; Mrs. Wm. H. Leaf, Mrs. Eugene Hall and two sons of Columbus, Ohio, and Mr. Chas. Gale of Calumet.

We sincerely regret that the condition of our columns this week prevents a more detailed story of this happy event, which the publisher would most cheerfully accord the occasion.

BIG FEATURES

OF THE FORTHCOMING CHAUTAUQUA PROGRAM IN THIS CITY ARE ANNOUNCED

Two-Day Musical Festival, One of the Innovations Balmic Kryl and His Band Soon to Start on Their Chautauqua Tour

Announcement has just been published of the principal features of the Redpath Chautauqua here for this season. The program is now full of good things and not a few innovations. There will not be a dull hour from start to finish.

One of the innovations will be a two-day grand musical festival during which there will be nothing but music, aside from the literary lectures of the morning hour speaker.

On the day of the festival, Marcus A. Kellerman, the great dramatic baritone, who has appeared in solo with the Demorest Orchestra, the Theodore Thomas Orchestra, the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra and other widely known organizations, will give a recital. Mr. Kellerman has also appeared in grand opera in Berlin and other foreign cities, but gave up a promising career in grand opera to engage in ballad and oratorio singing.

In the evening of the same day, the Cathedral Choir will appear in one of their musical programs. The repertoire of the Cathedral Choir includes short modern oratorios by high composers as Rossi, Stainer and Schnecker, also a number of old hymns, secular solos, duets, quartets and choruses of a very high order, finally closing with a finale of an operatic nature.

On the next day of this festival, Bohumir Kryl and his world-famous band will present a program in the afternoon including cornet solos by Mr. Kryl. This is the third season of Mr. Kryl and his band on the Redpath Chautauqua this year, there being a unanimous call for them everywhere.

In the evening of the same day Kryl and his band will be heard in another concert during the first part of the program and the latter part will be given up to selections from grand opera by the Boston Grand Opera Company, accompanied by the band. These grand opera players will appear in special costume. In fact it will be a grand opera to these two days, such as has never before been seen at a Chautauqua.

A special feature of the opening day will be a concert by the Dunbar quartette and Bell Ringers. Carrying a peal of the bells made in Boston, this company will furnish a program of interest to old and young.

This evening concert will be given in three parts. One part will include vocal quartet selections, the second will consist of instrumental numbers on violin, cello and piano, and the third division will include the famous bell ringing.

The Kellogg Haines Singing Party will present a special cantata on the singing of high opera, probably giving the entire rendition of "Lovely Galatea." This organization is one of the best known in the Lyceum and Chautauqua world today.

One of the several lecturers who will speak here Chautauqua week is to deal with the Japanese problem in this country—a subject which has been discussed a great deal during the past year and yet on upon which people outside of California are but little informed.

Having lived in Ohio and California, Mr. Flowers has been able to study the Japanese problem from the viewpoint of both eastern and western people. He points to the fact that the 2,000 of the 75,000 Japanese in the United States live in California. In 1910 the number was scarcely 100.

The usual emphasis will be placed Chautauqua week on work among the children. Each evening there will have a woman playground worker and story teller. The playground work will be free to all children.

Special attention will be paid to the Sunday programs and their appropriation to the spirit of the day, in the places where the Denton Grand Opera Company appears on Sunday, they will present selections from the oratorios. All days where Dr. Kellogg Haines Singing Party is there there on Sunday, too, will present a sacred program.

Other announcements will be made later as the other lecturers and musical companies which are coming Chautauqua week.

Chautauqua week in Charlevoix Aug. 12th to 18th.

REVIEW OF CONDITIONS

Trust Company Makes Statement of White Lumber Company Affairs

In reference to the affairs of the W. H. White Company, which we are conducting as Receiver under appointment by the United States Court in Equity, made November 19, 1913, we think that the creditors would be interested in the condition of affairs as appeared at the time of our appointment and the progress we have made since that time.

The liabilities then we were appointed were about as follows:

LIABILITIES

Bonds—

First Mortgage	$250,000.00
Sec. Mortgage	400,000.00
	$650,000.00

Bills Payable—

Secured	$375,000.00
Unsecured	33,000.00
	$108,000.00

Accounts Payable— 416,000.00

	$1,211,000.00

The assets of potential value consisted in a general way, of approximately 30,000 acres of hardwood land in Alpena, Charlevoix, Otsego, Antrim and Montmorency counties—$1,200,000 par value of stock of the White Bros. Lumber Company out of a total capital of $1,500,000. This Company owns timber licenses on Vancouver Island to the amount of about 15,000 acres, said to estimate four billion feet of timber—$300,000 par value of Yamsnock Yellow Fir Company stock out of $1,563,000 capital stock outstanding, owning 10,000 acres of timber in Tillamook county, Oregon.

Also a two-thirds interest in 2,240 acres in Lane and Douglass counties, Oregon, on which there is at present a mortgage of $50,000 a part of the secured Bills Payable referred above.

The Receiver has diligently applied itself to the conduct of the business in the usual way; cutting and sawing the timber with the purpose of liquidating the indebtedness. Funds for this purpose have been supplied by issuance of Receiver's Certificates under an order of the Court. The condition of the Company at this date is approximately as follows:

Statement of Condition May 15, 1914.

LIABILITIES

Bonds—

First Mortgage	$300,000.00
Sec. Mortgage	400,000.00
	$700,000.00

Bills Payable—

Secured	$70,000.00
Unsecured	39,000.00
	$109,000.00

Accounts Payable— $79,000.00

Receiver's Certificates Issued— $177,700.00

$1,015,700.00

The reduction of the Liabilities is caused by the payment of $50,000 of bonds maturing February first, a portion of which was paid from the sinking funds in the hands of the Trustee of the mortgage by which these bonds are secured on the hardwood lands above noted in Michigan and the balance from a portion of the proceeds of the Receiver's Certificates.

Bills Payable were reduced over $300,000 by the sale of $175,000 White Bros. Lumber Company stock listed above, at par, and the proceeds applied on loans to which it and other stocks were held as collateral and the balance by the sale of stock owned by James A. White and which had been pledged on notes of the White Company to which it was secured.

It is expected that Receiver's Certificates issued will be liquidated by the sale of the lumber when it is in marketable condition,

BLOCKADE IS OFF

HUERTA RESCINDS DECREE AS TO TAMPICO AS GUNBOATS REACH PORT.

MAKES PLEA TO MEDIATORS

Carranza Will Address Note to Envoys in Which He Will Announce That He Has Given Delegates to Mediation Conference.

Mexican City, June 10.—The blockade of Tampico has been suspended.

This formal announcement was issued on Monday by the government.

Niagara Falls, June 10.—The protests of the Mexican delegates and the A. B. C. plenipotentiaries forced President Wilson to stop the shipment of war supplies to the constitutionalists. A statement was made public by the Mexican envoys which shows that Washington has promised that the ammunition aboard the Antilla will not be landed at Vera Cruz.

Washington, June 10.—General Carranza will address a note to the A. B. C. mediators in which he will announce that he is ready to send delegates to the mediation conference. The instructions of the envoys will include the surrender of any protocol or other agreement which provides for the settlement of Mexican political affairs.

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 10.—The mediators have informed the Huerta government that the Huerta government at Mexico City had counterpromised the envoys of the A. B. C. powers to the effect that the port of Tampico was secure from any immediate bombardment, but the disclosure that the United States government had acceded in principle to the plan of pacification for Mexico drawn by the American and Mexican delegates here.

Washington, June 9.—General Carranza's reply to the last communication of the mediators has been received by the constitutionalists agent in Washington and will be sent to Niagara Falls this week. General Carranza expresses his willingness to enter the Niagara Falls conference, but on his own terms. The rebel chief will not consent to enter into any armistice. He still stands out against any attempt on the part of the Huerta or the A. B. C. diplomats to interfere with the internal affairs, but he gives evidence of a willingness to let down the bars slightly in regard to the question of a settlement of Mexican own difference through friendly conference. Carranza is willing to mediate the International questions involved in the present situation, and it is understood that he acknowledges that it will be necessary in this connection to discuss some phases of Mexico's internal affairs.

The stand that Carranza has taken was communicated to Secretary Bryan and it was expected that the administration found ground for hope in it that the mediators might finally submit Carranza to the consideration of Huerta's reply to the mediators, as received in Washington, contains many of certain instructions to his agents here. The mediatory communication was addressed to Senor Zubaran, Carranza's representative here, and the reply based on the first chief's instructions will be sent over the signature of Senor Zubaran. It is understood that the Zubaran note will seek to minimize the question of an armistice, at the same time giving no indication that Carranza will ever consider yielding on that point.

WILL ACCEPT TOLLS PLAN

President Wilson Expected to Agree to the Amendments Proposed in Congress.

Washington, June 9.—President Wilson is expected to accept the senate amendments to the Panama tolls exemption repeal, specifying that the United States does not waive its right to discriminate in favor of its own shipping, but he does not feel that the senate goes the exact to the repeal in "unavoiding measure" by attaching amendments. Mr. Wilson takes the position that as legislation in no way waives treaty rights he may accept the measure, although he desired passage of the repeal without qualification. The senate judiciary committee voted to begin work immediately on the Clayton omnibus trust bill passed last week by the house.

Office Holders Must'nt Lecture.

Washington, June 9.—A bill making it unlawful for any cabinet officer, department head or clerk, to lecture for pay other than actual travelling expenses during the time he occupies his position, and forbidding members of congress to lecture for pay while congress is in session, was introduced in the house by Representative Fritter of Illinois.

Moyer Trial Set for July 6.

Houghton, Mich., June 8.—The opening of the trial of President Charles Moyer of the Western Federation of Miners on a charge of conspiracy growing out of the recent strike of proper miners, was set for July 6.

CLAYTON BILL WINS

ANTI-TRUST MEASURE CARRIES EXEMPTION FOR LABORITES.

Farmers' Societies Are Also Immune —Only Two Democrats Oppose the Legislation.

Washington, June 8.—The administration's anti-trust legislation passed the house of representatives by decisive votes on Friday. The Clayton bills carrying plans for further regulation of the business and an issuance of securities will be rushed to the senate.

On the Clayton general trust bill which carried the labor and farmers' organizations' exemption clause and limitations on the power of courts to issue injunctions in labor disputes the vote was 270 to 94. A similar vote on stocks and bonds bill resulted 275 to 12. A federal trade commission bill passed without opposition.

The Clayton bill, besides the prohibition, carries legislation against the use of unfair methods by large corporations and seeks to restore competition. It provides also against interlocking directorates among competing concerns and interrelating corporations and banking companies. It is believed this provision will bring to the front a number of new men now held in subordinate positions because of the entrenchment of directorates, besides opening to individuals opportunities in the spheres controlled now.

Opposition to this bill came largely from the labor organizations and the injunction and contempt sections.

Only two Democrats voted on record as opposing this prohibition. They were White of Ohio and Geary of Rhode Island. The latter announced a pair with another member and withdrew his vote. All the Progressives except Chandler of New York voted for the bill.

EX-MAYOR IS FATALLY SHOT

"He Refused to Treat My Sick Child," Says Assassin of Doctor Dunn at Duquoin, Ill.

Duquoin, Ill., June 8.—Dr. D. Winton Dunn, formerly mayor of Duquoin, was shot and fatally wounded here on Sunday by Jesse Joplin.

"He refused to treat my sick child because of my financial ability," said Joplin in extension of his act.

News of the shooting so inflamed the community that the authorities took the precaution of hurrying Joplin to Murphysville, where he is held in the Perry county jail. Doctor Dunn was taken to St. Louis on a special train soon after the shooting, but died in a hospital here. He had received three shots in his abdomen, none of whose bullets failed to hit the objective.

U. S. SEEKS NO WAR, WILSON

President Tells Graduates of Annapolis That Nation of America Is That of Service.

Annapolis, Md., June 8.—President Wilson on Friday told 154 graduates of the Naval academy, many of whom leave shortly for Mexican waters, that the ambition of the United States is one of service to humanity, not of aggrandisement or conquest. He addressed the graduates at the annual academy graduation exercises, and later delivered the diplomas to the young midshipmen. He declared the duty of the United States is to serve the world.

Speaking of the Vera Cruz situation, the president reverently declared that "I pray God the boys there will not have to fight any more." He added that it is real good they will do so by their impression on the Mexicans.

U. S. BODY IS UPHELD

SUPREME COURT HOLDS COMMISSION FAIR IN MAKING POWER.

DECISION IS VERY SWEEPING

Believed to Be Most Thorough Declaration in Favor of the Government Authority Yet Made by the Supreme Court of the U. S.

Washington, June 10.—That the rate making power of the interstate commerce commission takes precedence over the jurisdiction of state commissions in situations where the reasonableness of interstate rates is called into question was shown when the U. S. Supreme court handed down a decision on Monday upholding the efforts of shippers of Shreveport, La., to obtain relief from alleged discrimination against them by the Texas railroad commission in favor of Houston and Galveston, Tex.

The decision is believed to be one of the most sweeping declarations in favor of the dominant authority of the federal government that the Supreme court has yet made.

The interstate commerce commission found that class and other rates from Shreveport to Texas points were unreasonable and ordered rates to be equalized so that Shreveport would not be at a disadvantage in favor of Dallas and Houston.

Justice Hughes said there were several ways of conforming to the commission's order. Besides the direction of the railroads that the commission could not reduce intrastate rates to conform with interstate rates, Justice Hughes said the power of congress was adequate to meet all the emergencies that arise out of local interference with national intercourse.

Justice Hughes said that congress, if it saw fit, might prescribe the rule when state and national interests conflict.

The Shreveport litigation grew out of a grievance made by shippers of Shreveport, La., against discrimination by the Texas railroad commission. The Louisiana railroad commission joined in this protest. It was contended the Texas commission refused relief to that business which should have come to Shreveport because of its geographical location near the Texas line, went to Houston and Galveston. By showing the commission could not get business in competition with Texas concerns, Shreveport was a fair, commercial field for the activities of all three cities. The Louisiana commission, appealed to the state commission, claiming that the rates which gave Shreveport to Texas points on the Texas Pacific railway and the Houston, East & West Texas railway were unreasonable and discriminatory. The commission decided that were unreasonable and prescribed lower interstate rates.

Ancient Calf.

Awkward mistakes occur sometimes through falling into certain mannerisms of expression. A person had a habit of frequently saying "for years and years and years," in the course of a sermon. He was preaching on the Prodigal Son, and spoke of him sitting down in that far-off land thinking of the home that he had not seen "for years and years and years."

"This was all right, but presently he spoke of the welcome the lad got from his father, and the calf which his father had killed to celebrate that happy day. "Yes," said he, dropping into his favorite cadence for the winding up of a sentence: "Yes, the calf which he had been fed for years and years and years!"

Then somebody laughed.

Perfect Sources of State Streams.

Michigan is to receive $5,000 for the protection of the headwaters of the state streams, which are of direct benefit to the forests.

The appropriation is a result of the Weeks law, which was passed by congress two years ago, providing that a certain amount be given to each state each year by the government for the protection of the headwaters of navigable rivers. The amount that Michigan is to receive was determined after representatives from the national forestry department at Washington had made a careful investigation of the streams of the state.

The United States government will pay the salaries of 11 men for a period of seven months to patrol the headwaters of Michigan's navigable streams. Their salaries will be $.25 a day. The public domain commission will supervise the work, engage the men and O. K. their vouchers.

The government is quite liberal in determining whether a stream is navigable or not. Any stream that will float a small lumber than a rowboat being considered navigable. Of course the appropriation for each state is determined by the number of navigable rivers in the state.

The following rivers in the lower peninsula have been classified as navigable: Muskegon, Au Sable, Thunder Bay, Thunder Bay, Pere Marquette and Grand. The following may be put under this classification: Thunder Bay, Pere Marquette, Au Gres, White and Grand. The rivers of the upper peninsula considered navigable are Tahquamenon, Manistique, Ontonagon and Menominee, and the White Pine and Sturgeon may be put into the navigable class.

There are many other rivers in the state which are considered by the headwaters are streams which have been already placed in the navigable class, and concerning which the government in the report sent to Washington.

Deaf School Holds Graduation.

Commencement exercises of the class of 1913, Michigan School for the Deaf, were held in Jennison hall.

Simplified Spelling is Indorsed.

The use of simplified spelling by students of the Michigan Agricultural college was sanctioned at a meeting of the college faculty.

The action was taken upon the recommendation of Prof. W. W. Johnson, head of the department of English and forestry, who presented a report on the subject of the proposed revision for a number of years.

"Many people are adverse to the new system," said Professor Johnson, "but I believe the language should be revised if it can be improved. The fact that most of the engineering photographs favor the step, and none opposed it, and its adoption by the University of Illinois, Northwestern university of Missouri and the state Normal schools of Illinois, Iowa, Wyoming and others shows that it is coming into general favor."

Under the new rules students will be allowed to spell according to the system of the "simplified spelling." "Iz" instead of "is" "tho" instead of "though" "comes tho" as sometimes now used.

Ferris Addresses Medical Graduates.

Gov. Woodbridge N. Ferris, speaker at the fourth annual commencement exercises of the Detroit College of Medicine and Surgery in Knights of Columbus auditorium, told the 34 graduates that the science of medicine was only in its infancy and that there was an unfinished field for the surgeon's young physician to make a name for himself in the capacity of surgeon. A department of public speaking in medical colleges to cultivate grace and good manners was recommended to the governor.

Prof. John Henry Carstens, M. D., A. C. B., delivered the faculty address. He declared there were too many medicine men in the state, and concerning the growth of the graduating class should assert himself.

Professor Baker Quits.

After having been on a leave of absence for more than a year, and drawing half pay for the greater portion of that time, Prof. J. Fred Baker, head of the department of forestry at the Michigan Agricultural college, has resigned from the college and will be heading in his resignation to the state board of agriculture.

After a trip through Tarrow Mr. Baker is in Heidelberg, and will go to Munich, Germany, for forestry, ing to accept a position at a state university.

HEAT KILLS MANY

29 PERSONS ARE DEAD AT CLEVELAND, 7 AT DETROIT AND THREE IN CHICAGO.

98 DEGREES IN ST. LOUIS

Records for June Are Smashed in Many Sections of the Middle West — Hundreds Are Prostrated.

Chicago, June 11.—Deaths, prostrations, an attempted suicide and a renewal of the menace of hydrophobia from the bites of savage stray dogs marked the wave of merciless heat which sent the mercury to 95 degrees on Tuesday. It was the hottest day of the year so far and the hottest June 9 since 1872, when 98 degrees was the mark.

Cleveland, O., June 11.—All heat records were broken for this season of the year when the official weather bureau thermometer registered 92 degrees on Tuesday. The bureau's thermometer on the public square at the ground level registered a maximum of 105 degrees. The entire city sweltered in there was little breeze and the percentage of humidity was high. Since Sunday when the heat wave started the heat has caused the death of 29 persons, 20, of whom were babies. More than a score have been prostrated and the suffering in the congested districts of the city is terrible. Prospects of a strike among the ice men caused much concern. If the hot weather continues it is feared the city will face a milk famine as the dairymen are having trouble filling the demand.

Detroit, Mich., June 11.—In Detroit seven deaths were reported and eight prostrations on Tuesday. The maximum temperature was official, 93, and unofficial, 102.

St. Louis, June 11.—The hottest day of 1914 in St. Louis and vicinity was recorded yesterday, Tuesday, the mercury rising 97 at 3 p. m. and the mark almost 98 at 4 p. m. Three prostrations and no deaths were reported.

Kansas City, Mo., June 11.—With the mercury reaching 92 degrees Tuesday, was the hottest of the season. While the humidity was high and everybody suffered no prostrations resulted and no deaths were ascribed to the heat.

Cincinnati, June 11.—One death and a score or more prostrations was the toll exacted by the terrific heat in this city on Tuesday. The highest mark reached was 94 degrees at three o'clock in the afternoon.

SYNOPSIS.

John Valiant, a rich society favorite, suddenly discovers that the family corporation, which has rather flourished, has been in financial straits for years, and that his father, Colonel Valiant, has turned over his private fortune to the receiver for the corporation. His entire remaining possession consist of an old house and a white bull dog with character, much character, and a name to match, "Mr. Darcy." Darcy soon has John's character, too, as a supercharger beautiful and devoted. John finds his pal in Pat Malone, Mrs. Thoroughdigg, and Major Brisbane exchange, refreshment during which it is revealed that the major, Valiant's father, and a Confederate veteran, are the last of the band of Mr. Thoroughdigg in the south. Hanson and Valiant fought a duel on her account in Mexico. Hanson married Valiant from Darcy court trespassers. John is engaged to Miss Ethel Rivers, but he decides to rehabilitate the place and marry the girl next door, Miss Jane. Valiant saves Darcy from choking to death on a chicken bone. Major Brisbane explains from the wound and saves his life. Valiant and Major Brisbane are shot at by the bailiff, presumably at the behest of Jerry Hanson. Valiant is again fired at for the first time that his father left Virginia, or rather, was run out of it. Valiant, Major Brisbane and Major Brisbane defend as his father's seconds.

"You are cold," he said. "Isn't that gown too thin for this night air?"

"No, I often walk here till quite late.

"The bird song had broken forth again, to be answered this time by a rival's in a distant thicket. "My nightingale is in good voice."

"I never heard a nightingale before I came to Virginia. I wonder why it sings only at night."

"What an odd idea! Why not sings in the daytime too?"

"Really? But I suppose it escapes notice in the general chorus. It is a large bird?"

"No smaller than a thrush. Only a little bigger than a robin. Its nest is over there in that bedge—a tiny heap of dried cobhouses, lined with hair, and the eggs are olive color. How pretty the songs looks now, all tangled with fresh snarks!"

"Doesn't it. Uncle Jefferson calls them lightning-bugs."

"The name is much more picturesque. But all the daily surprises are. Do you find him and Aunt Daphne useful?"

"He has been a godsend," he said fervently, "and her cooking has taught me to treat her with passionate respect. He's cracking me now about flowers—It's surprising how many kinds he knows. He's a walking herbarium."

"Come and see mine," she said. "Roses are our specialty—we have to live up to the Rosewood name. Beyond the arbors, are beds and beds of other flowers. Some—by this hig tree are spend-well and delphinium. The tree is a black-walnut. It's a dreadful thing to have one as big as that. When you want something that costs a lot of money you go and look at it and wonder which you want most, that purplish luxury or the tree. I know a girl who had two in her yard only a little bigger than this and she went to Europe on them. But so far I've always voted for the tree. How does your garden come on?"

"Famously. Uncle Jefferson has shanghaied a half-dozen negro gardeners—from where I can't imagine—and we's having the time of his life factoring over them. He refers to the upper and lower terraces as upsadownstairs. I've got seeds, but it will be a long time before they flower."

"Oh, would you like some slips?" she cried. "Or, better still, I can give you the roses already rooted—Mad Charles and Maresnal Neil and Cloth of Gold and cabbage and rambliers. We have geraniums and fuchsias, too and the usual hearty suckis. That's different from the wild one, you know."

"You are too good! If you would only advise me where to set them! But I dare say you think me presumptuous."

She turned her full face to him. "Presuming! . . . I've pitching me now for the dreadful way I talked to you about Tommy Court—before I knew who you were. Oh, it was unpardonable! And after the splendid thing you had done—I read about it that same evening—with your money I mean!"

"No, no!" he protested. "There was nothing splendid about it. It was only pride. You see the corporation was my father's great idea—the thing he created and put his soul into—and it was humiliating. I know that would have hurt him. One thing I've wanted to say to you, ever since the day we talked together—about the duel. I want to say that whatever is behind it, my father's whole life was darkened by that event. Now that I can put two and two together, I know that it was the cause of his sadness."

"Ah, I can believe that," she replied.

"I think he had only two interests—myself and the country. So you see why I'd rather save that and be a beggar the rest of my natural life. But I'm not a beggar. Tommy Court alone is worth—I know it now—a hundred times what I left."

"You are so utterly different from what I imagined you!"

"I could never have imagined you," he said "twice."

"I must be terribly queer."

"You are so many things in one. When I listened to your harp playing I could hardly believe it was the woman I saw galloping across the fields that morning. Now you are a different woman from both of them."

As she looked at him, her lips curled up into her face slipped on the sheer edge of the turf. She swayed toward him and he caught her, feet for a sharp instant the adorable nearness of her body. It ridged all his skin with a creeping delight. She recovered her footing with an exclamation, and drawing her hands on the arms of his chair in the fierce mental effort to recall it. Onto the intense bliss of her eyes, the tawny sweep of her hair—these and the touch of her hands—consciousness of her warm and vivid fragrance, remained to wrap all his senses in a mist woven of gold and fire.

Shirley, meanwhile, had set some time beside her mother's bed, leaning from a white chintz-covered chair her anxiety only partially allayed by reassurances, now and then stooping to kiss her young cheek against the delicate arm in its lace sleeve or to pass her hand lovingly up and down its outline, noting with a recurrent passion of tenderness the transparency of the fifth with its violet veining and the shadows beneath the closed eyes. Presently, moving on soft worsted-shod feet about the dim room, at length had whispered

"You go too bad, honey. I stay with Aunt Judith till she go tah sleep."

"Yes, go, Shirley," said her mother. "Haven't I any privileges at all? Can I even faint when I feel like it, without pulling out the Bridgeside? You'll pamper me to death and heaven knows I don't need it."

"You won't let me telephone for Doctor Southall?"

"Certainly not!"

"And you are sure it was nothing but the roses?"

"Why, what else should it be?" and her mother almost peevishly. "I must really have the arbors thinned out. On heavy nights it's positively overpower-ing. Go along now, and well talk about it tomorrow. I can ring if I want anything."

In her room Shirley undressed thoughtfully. There was between her and her mother a fine tenuous bond of sympathy and feeling as rare, perhaps as it was lovely. She could not remember when the other had not been a sensitivalist and her earliest childhood recollections were punctuated with the lap of the little cone. Twaddle's sudden indisposition had shocked and disturbed her; to faint at a rush of perfume seemed to suggest a growing weakness that was alarmingly. Tomorrow, she told herself, she would send Ranston with a wagon-load of the roses to the hospital at Charlottesville.

She slipped on a pink sheltschaed dressing-gown of shiny silk, with a rout of azaleas scattered in the weave. Her slippers drawn up her chair before the open window, drew aside the light curtain and began to brush her hair. At a sound she gave fell upon the floor and she shrank backward from a twinkling thread-like thing whose bright saffron-yellow glowed sharply against the dark carpet. She saw in an instant, however, that it was nothing more dangerous than a fragment of cowslime from the garden, which had clung to her skirt. She picked up the tiny mass of tendrils and with a slow smile tossed it over her right shoulder through the window. "I'm taken root," she said aloud, "my sweetheart loves me." She leaned from the sill to peer down into the dusky garden, but omen not follow its tail.

Long ago her visitor wou'd have reached Tommy Court. She had a vision of him wandering, candle in hand, through the empty echoing rooms, looking at the victorious portraits on the walls, thinking perhaps of his father, of the fatal duel of which he had never known. She liked the way he had spoken of his father!

As she leaned, out of the stillness there came to her ear a mellow sound, like a soft bell of the economic in the village. She counted the strokes falling clearly or faintly as the English breeze ebbed or swelled. It was eleven.

She drew back, dropped the curtain to shut out the wan glimmer, and in the darkness crept into the soft bed as if into a hiding-place.

* * *

A warm sun and an air mildly mellow. A faint gold-dusted mist over the valley and a soft blue haze blending the rounded outlines of the hills. Through the shrubbery at Tommy Court a cardinal darted like a crimson shuttle, to perch jauntily upon a fleering limb, and here and there on the blinky-very sky, emulsions as a pasted water, hung a hawk; from time to time one of these warmed and stared swiftly down, to drop down into a huge spiral to its lush tower again.

Perhaps it wondered, as its telescopic eye looked down. That bird been its choicest covert, that dither eled tangle where the birds held per petual carnival, the ancient ivy on the underbrush and the rabbit fled with a scuttle! Where had everything gone. A sprightly, glistening white, now lifted its head and stood motionless, a sickle-like path from the upper terrace to the lake. In the barn loft the immense accumulation of years of harvests of fresh pine, and under a clump of lilac bushes, the half-decayed dolls' cabins of generations, the hobby-horse age of the black and gold bees.

There were new denizens, also. Three hens in the hen-house, new tanks and willow hampers, to the accompaniment of a shrieking and a rattling of chains, two swans now sailed majestically over the silver-moon of the lake, along its gravel rim and a pair of bronze-colored ducks waddled and preened, and its placid surface ripples and broke to the sluggish backs of two beasts, the mirror-like fins of red Japanese carp.

The house itself wore another air its look of unkemptness had largely vanished. The soft gray tone of age mellowed, and the bleakness and forlorness were gone; there was about it a warmth and genial welcoming that hinted at mellowed beauty, fire light and cheerful voices within.

Valiant heaved a long sigh of satisfaction as he stood in the sunlight gazing at the remote, old house. It was not now the flippant boulevardier.

Shirley, Who Had Again Seated Herself, Suddenly Laughed, and Pointed to the Book.

in the doorway behind them. John Valiant sprang to his feet.

"Ah, Shirley, I thought I heard voices. Is that you, Cliffy?"

"Yes, Mr. Lamb, mother," said Shirley. "It's our new neighbor, Mr Valiant."

As he bent over the frail hand, murmuring the conventional words that presentations are believed to require, Mrs. Dandridge sank into a deep cushioned chair. "Won't you sit down?" she said. He noticed that she did not look directly at him, and that her face was as pallid as her hair.

"Thank you," said John Valiant, and resumed his place on the lower step.

Shirley, who had again seated herself, suddenly laughed, and pointed to the book which lay between them. "Imagine what we are doing, dearest! We were reading 'Lenlie' together."

She saw the other wince, and the deep dark eyes lifted, as if under compulsion, from the book cover to Valiant's face. He was startled by Shirley's cry and the sudden limp unconscious settling back into the cushions of the fragile form.

"Oh, thank you, sir! You don't know how much I would appreciate it. I'm going to send all my telegrams through this office. You are so obliging."

And the smile she gave him would have done any one good with the possible exception of Arthur.

Old English Custom Kept Up.

An ancient custom of the Clinque Ports was celebrated a short time ago at Brightlingsea, Essex, England, when Mr. Douglas Stone was re-elected mayor with old-world ceremony. In the belfry of the parish church, Rev. Arthur Partridge, vicar of Brightlingsea, being re-elected recorder, Sir Charles, or sanitania, were also elected, paying a fee of 11 pennies. Brightlingsea is "attached" to the Cinque Port of Sandwich, and its mayor is known as the deputy, being deputy to the mayor of the latter town. The newly elected mayor has to journey to Sandwich to be invested with the chain of office, this chain being of a very handsome design of gold oyster shells and silver sceptre, and having attached, massive opal bull, supposed to be one of the most valuable opals in England. The office of deputy which dates back to the year 1442, carries with it various privileges which are jealously guarded.

Courage.

The most indispensable and valuable asset for the conduct of life is courage—courage to endure, courage to construct and reconstruct, courage to go on. Without these both shall we do more than feel an miserable existence, moving from place to place, like tramps and beggars, living on the dole, lots offers us as we slouch along unprecedtiated ways? Could there be a better prayer for the opening year than this? "Give us courage to be masters of ourselves, courage to swim against the stream, courage to grow, when our day time is come, with serene hearts and quiet faith in God." When that prayer is answered, living becomes a song and dying becomes an episode in the history of a man. If religion did not more than make this forward looking courage possible it would deserve our revel ence and pursuit.—Boston Transcript.

THOUGHT ONLY OF ARTHUR

Telegraph Clerk Amounted to Nothing When Sweet Innocence Was Sending a Message.

She sailed into the telegraph office and rapped on the counter. The clerk remembered that she had been there about ten minutes before as he came forward to meet her. He wondered what she wanted this time.

"Oh," she said, "let me have that telegram I wrote just now; I forgot something very important. I wanted to underscore 'perfectly lovely' in acknowledging the receipt of that bracelet. Will it cost anything extra?"

"No, ma'am," said the clerk as he handed her the message.

The young lady drew two heavy lines beneath the words and said:

"It's awfully good of you to let me do that. It will please Arthur ever so much."

"Don't mention it," said the clerk. "If you would like it I will put a few drops of violet extract on the line drawn at the home rates."

"Oh, thank you, sir! You don't know how much I would appreciate it. I'm going to send all my telegrams through this office. You are so obliging."

And the smile she gave him would have done any one good with the possible exception of Arthur.

"THOROUGHBRED"

When Ethel May Terrell walked out of the Tremont theater, Boston, on the night of June 1 her breath came in little starts and her eyes were blurred. Ethel was an actress and—a sentimentalist.

To say good by to persons or things that she loved was to her agony. She went into her voice and a lump into her throat. Tonight Ethel was saying good by to the stage forever. Outside a motor was waiting to take her to the Hub. There she would meet her supper. Then, a honeymoon in Europe. Then, the wonderful, conventional life of a rich man's wife.

Young actresses that Ethel knew married. More experienced than she, her profession shook their heads and sighed. Ethel cried a little, but she had chosen. She loved Richie, and she was ready to give up the thing that she thoroughbred." They know the role of Mrs. Richard Brown had broken her heart. Ethel May Terrell! They know that Kate May Terrell is the finest thing in the world, thoroughbred, loyal, unselfish, throw down no bluff. She can't play it.

But there are those who wonder sometimes if it's worth while being "thoroughbred."—Barra More, in the Buffalo Express.

Spoiled the Evening.

Helen had coaxed her mother to go to a nonsense play called backache, headache, nervousness, and the blues. In many cases they are symptoms of some female derangement or an inflammation. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will generally overcome this, when nothing else will. Such disappointment, was total indeed, she said the next morning.

"Why, what happened?"

"Why, the play was about a woman who had a backache, headache, nervousness, and the blues, and I thought it was funny, and I laughed and laughed, and mother thought I was crazy, and I had to go home and go to bed."

"Did you not enjoy the play?"

"Enjoy it? Why, I laughed so hard I spoiled the evening for everybody else."

"Did you not explain to your mother the cause of your mirth?"

The Militant Suffragist

The average gentleman of good, sound, sane mind is against suffragettes. He will hate at the drop of the hat to insult an insult to a woman, from his wife or sweetheart to a stranger. But there are very many of this class of gentlemen who nevertheless wear wives and daughters who express some of a domestic philosophy which spurns woman suffrage as something foreign to their main mission in life. In this idiotic they religiously believe because of their high conception of wifehood and motherhood.

We believe that the cause of woman suffrage in the United States is doomed to an overwhelming defeat as a direct result of the outrageous and criminal conduct of the militants in England. The American gentleman however chivalrous is not a slobber of weak woman, the friend of anarchy. He believes in respect for the law.

He recognizes no feminine amenity when woman becomes a malicious law breaker.

The cause of woman suffrage is by its votaries claimed to be a moral question. If it be so then the chairmen of the cause wherever displayed, must share the disgrace that these misguided women of England immure upon their sex.

It is our private opinion that women as well as millions should be sampled, deported, or permitted to starve themselves. They are a disgrace to humanity.

Baseball Tour in 1915.

The eastern clubs in both American cities have slowly become interested in the proposed invasion of the major league baseball clubs which has been suggested for the fall of 1915. Word has been received that the project is expected to be a success and that the enthusiasm for baseball in South America runs high. Manager McGraw says that it was the idea of the promoters of the proposed trip to end the tour on the Pacific coast before the closing of the Panama exposition in 1915.

The latest suggestion for the tour is to have the two clubs made up of the star players of both leagues, play a few exhibition games in the east and south after the world's series and then go to Cuba. The itinerary would then call for a brief visit to Panama and from there to South America, playing in the leading cities of the continent. The plan is to travel down the east and come north on the west side of South America.

Then a longer stay could be made at Panama, playing in all the principal places in the canal zone, where the enormous Americans would welcome the baseball teams.

From New York it is planned to go to the Pacific coast and play in several cities in California before the close of the big fair. As the trip is now proposed the baseball party would be able to meet favorable weather conditions throughout the trip.

Lipton Cables Explanation.

A story appeared recently that Sir Thomas Lipton was looking for land and would select the faster of the two to race for the America's cup.

Under the rules governing the cup races Sir Thomas could only nominate one boat. Shamrock IV, to race even with one other.

In answer to a query Sir Thomas cabled:

"Two boats are building, one for Panama exposition at San Francisco, which will race for the President's cup, if satisfactory to me, and one for myself to be inspected, if I am satisfied, and race for the cup, if I decide to do so. Any other statements are not authorized by me. Any alleged interviews are false. Should I decide to race, I will receive a more hearty welcome than last time."

Russians Think Well of Trotters.

Recently from Russia, where a number of Cleveland horses are now owned, came the handsome trotter Mary McKerron, owned by Prince Vainecki of St. Petersburg, he has made a favorable impression upon Russian horsemen. Prince Vainecki owns Hodenski and Jack Abbott, Voitz and Dennis to come to America this summer to see the trip perform on the grand circuit. Abbotts Watts is to be raced by Mike McDevitt.

Mary McKerron formerly was owned by John L. O'Brien of Cleveland.

East Jordan Enterprise: on Aug. 11, 1911, the marriage of Miss Ada Hon. W. J. Pearson made a specially delightful event in the work of Louis Hon and in Herman I. McMillan of this city, whose name appears on the ballot for this office is found another who possesses the personal characteristics necessary for a successful legislature in superlative degree more marked even than in "Billy" Pearson. Mr. McMillan will be a representative of whom Republicans will be proud and on whom all people in Charlevoix county can rely that their interests in any and every matter coming before the legislature will be safely and ably cared for. The people will profit by an mistake in selecting Mr. McMillan. That the Enterprise was entirely correct in its statement regarding Mr. McMillan was amply verified in his record as the legislative session. Now Mr. McMillan has decided to stand for renomination, and with his splendid personal qualifications for the office enhanced by his experience the present term, when our people shall have renominated and re-elected this district in the state will be better or more ably represented than Charlevoix county.

Boyne City Journal: George W. Kent, died at his home, corner of East and River streets, aftaine of short duration. Mr. Kent been ill for three years with Bright's disease, which developed into uremia poisoning. Early in the evening he became much worse and lost consciousness, death came before he rallied. Mr. Kent passed his forty-sixth birthday last December. He was born in Grovetille, O., moving from there when yet a boy, to Atchison of Kansas where he spent his childhood. Most of his life has been spent in newspaper work in Michigan, coming here at about the age of twenty-three. He was a Republican, associated with the Traverse City Record and Petoskey News, being with the former when the Kent and Leelanau counties solidified. He came to Boyne City two years to assume the management of the Evening Journal, which position he was compelled to resign the following winter, that he might go to a different climate in the hope of regaining his fast failing health. About a year ago he returned to this city, and accepted the position of editor of the Boyne City Times, remaining on this paper until the consolidation of the two local papers last February, when he was unable to accept a position with the new firm owing to his physical condition.

Who Banks Your Earnings!

Somebody does. If you are letting it all slip away from you, then a certain portion of it is being banked by the various people to whom you pay it. Why not have it banked for yourself after you working for it? Some of it will repay the compliment by working for you if you will but give it the opportunity.

Earn a portion of your earnings: keep in mind the beginnings of the big man of business whom you are prone to envy, thinking they have the mysterious Midas touch. Almost without exception they began with the capital but a savings will and an unlimitle purpose.

A FARM REPAST

An Auto Trip to a Marion Dairy Farm, and a Great Feast

Did you city slaves ever have any experience with an old-fashioned farm dinner with modern embellishments, when everything on the table was grown on the place from the chicken pie to the fluffy biscuit? If so, was it at the time of the year when the perfume of red clover was wafted to you through the window screens, and it was a feast you cannot forget.

It was an old-fashioned farm supper that Mr. and Mrs. William Shapton served out at their Glenwood dairy farm, in Marion, Tuesday evening. The writer "celebrated" with six others at the feast, and the six were Doctors Lewis, Armstrong and Wilkinson, A. F. Bridge, W. J. Rachow and A. Buttars.

It was a feast fit for a king, served amid surroundings that spelled comfort and prosperity. While the hostess and her two accomplished daughters were preparing the feast the party were shown through and about the premises—the scrupulously clean cow-stables, with modern floors and sanitary drainage, without so much as a suspicion that take every vestige of uncleanliness beyond the "milkers" incumbrance.

There are twenty-two plump cows eating alfalfa as if they liked it, and out in the fields are growing the combination of succulent fodder that next fall will fill the twenty silos for winter use, and ever beyond a little way is the sub-silo, with potato appearance that not only saves labor but provides delicious, fine, an acetylene gas lighting system in the basement of the residence illuminates every building on the farm.

As we emerge from the big sanitary barn-basement and look out over the broad fields and undulating hills: look where you will and the big barns, comfortable homes and successive cities meet your vision, and the old-timer barks back to the days when it was forest, forest everywhere, with only now and then a log-house. Dr. Lewis, Buttars and the writer were the only men who had seen all this transformation, and to them it all had deep meaning, and awakened enthusiastic emotions.

Now the Shapton sawmill runs the four miles down to the city every morning in fifteen minutes with the milk and cream for breakfast, if you do it arise too early. The modern cosy home, abounding in music and good cheer means years of hard work in younger days, but now richly deserved reward.

Why Should We Do It?

Why should Charlevoix county go to the front in Congressional conditions when this senatorial district has a candidate who has earned promotion?

Mr. Fordney has served six terms as senator from this district, and we call for a statement of where he has been delinquent in any respect upon any burning question.

Some of the good immaculate brothers have raised the "wet and dry" question against senator Scott. As an interpolation we wish to observe here that the injection of that question into legitimate politics that fail will defeat local option if it should be submitted, and we also observe, parenthetically, that this paper is for local option.

But what are the facts with respect to senator Scott's record?

In 1913 a bill was introduced by the wets known as the "Unit Bill," which provided that townships and wards might vote whether they would or would not allow saloons within their limits, and against this bill. At the same session the drys introduced a bill to submit a woman suffrage. Scott voted for the submission.

In 1913 only one dry measure reached the Senate for a vote and that was the "Prepaid" which precluded the importation of liquors into dry territory. Scott voted in favor of this bill. The State Wide Prohibition Bill was killed in the House of Representatives and never reached the floor of the Senate.

There is no spot in Scott's entire legislative career which would lead any fair minded man to the thought or the belief that he was tied up to, or in any way interested in the liquor traffic.

A distinguished citizen of Charlevoix, in a recent newspaper interview has pledged Charlevoix county to the Sou ...ment—a worthy gentleman, in every way personally entitled to recognition—but, in all reason why should we go to the Soo for a congressional candidate?

There is no better way of judging the character of a man than by his associates.

Recently Frank M. Scott has the support of the best people of Alpena. He is a lawyer of ability and reputable standing.

He has call attention to this fact: There are underground postoffice pledges, involving local territory that constitute a political inspiration in this particular time and which the behalf the people of Charlevoix county for the Soo candidate.

There is no logical reason why Charlevoix county representatives should withhold their support to this proposition.

Political Announcement!

I hereby announce myself as a republican candidate for the office of County Treasurer subject to the August primaries.

PENCIL DAY WILL BE JULY SEVENTH

Charlevoix Women Will Aid in The Work—Pencils Will be Sold For The Benefit of Michigan Child Welfare League—Mrs. A. L. Coulter, Chairman

Pencil Day is planned for Tuesday, July 7th. Pencils will be sold by a large committee of young ladies for whatever friends wish to give for them, for the benefit of the Michigan Child Welfare League.

The following are officers of Pencil Day Committee. Mrs. A. L. Coulter, chairman; Mrs. Harry Nicholls, vice chairman; Mrs. W. J. Bennett, secretary; Mrs. S. A. Bush, secretary; Mrs. A. F. Bridge, Mrs. J. L. Crane, treasurer; Mrs. Ernest Bennett, treasurer. The headquarters for the day will be at the Charlevoix State Bank.

The Michigan Child Welfare League is doing a grand work in helping the poor in a way that makes it possible for them to help themselves and is doing everything to keep children with their parents when poverty is the principal cause for separation.

The following is a summary of the work of the league: It relieves need, removes immediately; it ascertains the conditions in and surrounding the family, and utilizes the facts with respect to definite plans to lead the family back to normal living; it finds work wherever possible for those who for special reasons cannot get it for themselves; it provides medical relief and necessary care in our crowding and ill-ventilated tenements; it provides through the public schools, efficient co-operating bodies; through its educational department it presents to the public the needs of the poor, the cause of their poverty and suggests best methods of relief, cure and prevention.

Mrs. Cora Lounsberry, general director of the work, has been in Child Welfare Work in Michigan for the past twenty years. The work is nonsectarian and supported by voluntary gifts entirely. It is hoped that all will buy pencils and give as liberally as possible for them, to help the worthy cause that is helping the less fortunate in this county.

Campaign Lies

We do not believe Mr. Bayliss, of the Boyne City Herald, is responsible for the lies that are being circulated about Frank Scott, and we believe that the voters of the district will resent the insinuation.

A recent dirty attack is from the pen of the "distinguished Charlevoix Citizen," in a letter to the Boyne City Herald. Progress—the same man who has recently pledged Bayliss a majority in Charlevoix county.

The indirect but nevertheless plain charge against Scott are not only false but cowardly, and we believe they will resent against Mr. Bayliss.

It is exceedingly dirty politics.

TWO BODIES RECOVERED

Remains of Jerry Yettaw and Henry Pappineau Drift on Beaver's Shores.

At practically the same time the bodies of two of the burned Vega's victims were found on the beach of Beaver Island Sunday—those of Jerry Yettaw and Henry Pappineau.

The body of Pappineau was found near the head of the Island within a mile of the vicinity of the disaster. A most shocking feature of the case is that the remains of Yettaw were found on the west side of the island, near the head, and to them was securely fastened a cork life preserver.

This substantiates the fact that Yettaw floated about in the lake with his head and shoulders above the water and cold. The parents of Yettaw are nearly prostrated with grief at the loss of a son who was a most accomplished young man.

On the steamer Beaver Monday morning two caskets went over in charge of an undertaker, and the bodies arrived here Monday evening.

Both funerals were held Tuesday, Samuel Jerry Yettaw from the home of Frank Lamphere and that of Henry Pappineau from the home of George Pappineau.

Schools in Fine Links

In getting away from the Halstead dock on Pine Lake Saturday during the street railway gale that prevailed, the Schools in Fine Links drifted on the beach, carrying those on pounding on the sandy bottom, the boat washing over the boat.

The tug Parmelee went to her relief and pulled her off, no damage being caught until she was well out in the lake on her way to Boyne City. Those who refused to send her below, and it was discovered that her shoe was broken, and the rudder disabled. In this condition she drifted to the beach again, on the opposite side of the lake. Sunday morning the steamer Beaver went up, but found that her line would not reach the boat. Capt. Campbell was compelled to return here for another line. This was then secured and brought down the lake. Temporary repairs were made and the City of Boyne left Monday morning for Manistee where she went to dry dock.

Will Sacrifice Himself for "Principle."

Former Superintendent of Public Instruction, Henry R. Pattengill will be the national progressive candidate for governor this year. Announcement was made that he would accept the nomination which the members of the state central committee of the Bull Moose party have assured him he would have without any opposition at the primaries.

For many years Pattengill has been prominent in state affairs and in fact he was a stalwart republican. He was twice nominated and elected superintendent of public instruction on the republican ticket. At the present time Mr. Pattengill is unwilling to endorse the planks of his platform, but he says he will stand for the same principles he espoused in recent years.

Forty States and Ten Foreign Countries Represented at a Redpath Chautauqua in Michigan

CHAUTAUQUA SCENE AT BATTLE CREEK, MICH.

WHEN the Redpath Chautauqua was at Battle Creek, Mich., last season no one day there were representatives present from forty different states and ten foreign countries. The foreign countries represented were Scotland, Mexico, Canada, Chile, France, Germany, India, Norway, Bohemia and Japan. This day was known as Sanitarium Day, as those present from these different states and foreign countries were from the Sanitarium.

There were in the audience 300 nurses and 800 guests from the Battle Creek Sanitarium.

From the School of Home Economics 100 girls were present. Thirty orphans from the Haskell Children's Home were also in attendance.

It is estimated that during the day 4,000 citizens of Battle Creek visited the Chautauqua.

The principal attraction of the day's program was Bohumir Kryl and his Band. The audience was a most enthusiastic one. Mr. Kryl was called upon to play four encores.

STEAMER DESTROYED

M. M. Steamer Manistee, After Having Been Thoroughly Rebuilt, is Burned at Ferrysburg

The Northern Michigan Transportation Co. steamer Manistee was burned to the water's edge last Sunday night at Ferrysburg, Mich.

During the winter she had been thoroughly rebuilt at Manistee, at an expense of $30,000 and had been taken to Ferrysburg to receive a new boiler. The Manistee was commanded by Capt. Geo. Johnson, and would soon have been ready to ply between Chicago and the Traverse City. Charlevoix was one of her ports.

At Grand Rapids special says: Two men were hurry burned and a full crew of men had a hard time of it in fighting their way through smoke and flames and jumping from windows into the lake, when the passenger steamer Manistee, formerly the Petoskey, caught fire while lying in the Ferrysburg slip and burned to the lake water's edge. The boat was owned by the Northern Michigan Transportation company and the loss is estimated at between $250,000 and $300,000, partially covered by insurance.

The fire, of unknown origin, started in the stern of the boat about 9 o'clock. It spread so rapidly that the men on board as the craft, which had just received a new set of boilers and had been thoroughly rebuilt, left at 10:00 o'clock for Chicago to resume traffic operations. When the Grand Rapids and Western of the northern Michigan Transportation company, was use of the steamer, the fire was well advanced, and narrowly escaped death. Captain George Johnson stood by the boat until the crew safely landed.

J. M. Morris for Senator

"Mac" Harris needs no endorsement by this or any other newspaper. He is the candidate of the Republican party of Charlevoix county for state senator, and that is all there is of it.

Mr. Harris may be claimed as a Charlevoix county product. He taught country school, went through college and came out a lawyer. Today he is one of the foremost lawyers of Northern Michigan, and probably has as immense a practice as any.

He is not only a good lawyer but is a mighty good citizen, level headed, a hard worker and of a personal character that challenges criticism.

He is a man of a man that will make his mark in the Michigan legislature. He is bonder for that august body, and you cannot stop him.

Joe Bayliss Should Read the Riot Act

Joe Bayliss is an honest man. This being so he should cut off some of his foul slander in this section.

We believe that matchmaking is generally recognized as a high crime in this country men who are willing to take a lie home than they will the truth.

There is not a man in this congressional district who stands higher in his own community than does Frank Scott. Neither is there a man in the district who is better equipped, either in ability or character, to represent it in congress.

We feel that opposition to the nomination for the nomination in the lower peninsula of this district, must be an addition to Mr. Scott's strength.

We said that Mr. Hinkley's withdrawal should cause him to actively support Mr. Scott, as we are told, he has written Mr. Scott and pledged his friends for many years. Still Mr. Hinkley cannot be harshly criticised for remaining neutral.

Scott will unequivocally receive a very large vote on the outside of the district, and newspaper comment from the west side indicates that he will be equally as strong there now that Hinkley has withdrawn.

One of the small newspapers in the northern peninsula, whose owner has a personal grudge against Senator Scott, recently stated that Hinkley would support an Upper Peninsula candidate. We feel confident that this cannot be true, as there is no reason why Scott should be opposed in the Upper Peninsula. Scott's worst enemies admit that he is well qualified to be a good Congressman, and his friends throughout the entire district would therefore feel that opposition to his candidacy in the Lower Peninsula was prompted either by personal animosity or a political arrangement with the Upper Peninsula politicians.

Mr. Scott proved his competency in the state Senate. He succeeded in accomplishing everything he undertook, and we feel confident that if nominated and elected, he will make good in Congress.—Alpena Evening News.

Concerning "Mac"

H. J. McMillan has served one term as representative in the state legislature from Charlevoix county. We challenge denial of the statement that he has been true to every obligation to his constituency.

McMillan is an honest man in business, and he has been honest in public life. Under well established political precedents he is entitled to a second term. We cannot concede that McMillan has been deficient in any quality that constitutes a faithful public servant.

"Show us" where he has failed in any duty to his constituency. Demonstrate to us and the public any good reason why he should not succeed himself.

There is not a strain in the nature of H. J. McMillan that is not true to duty.

The steamer Topeka arrived Friday evening from Boyne Mines, Ont., with 1,200 tons of crushed and screened trap rock for the city. The material is of a fairly character, and it is said that there is two dollars worth of gold in every ton. It was discharged in several places along the west harbor front. It will be used by the city in surfacing the Michigan avenue pavement extension and other work of that character that may be provided for. The local custom house collected $180 import duty on the cargo.

OSBORN CONSENTS

THINKS HE CAN RENDER SERVICE

Refers to His Recent Travels and Says His Happiness Does Not Depend On Holding Office

Formal announcement of the candidacy of Chase S. Osborn for nomination as the republican candidate for governor was made Friday. Mr. Osborn's signed statement is as follows:

"To the People of Michigan:

I am a republican candidate for governor.

My personal happiness does not depend upon holding any office. It does depend upon willingness to render service.

If I am chosen governor, I will give the state much the same kind of an administration that I gave before. With the experience gained during the period I was governor and as a result of travel and study since, I should be able to do the work better.

I would ask all citizens to vote for the welfare and dignity and character of Michigan before considering any party or any candidate. Secondly, vote for the restoration of the republican party to cause and duty. And lastly vote for too candidate who is most likely to serve our state well.

I return to Michigan with thankfulness to God for preservation during long journeys over sea and land; with deeper love for my country and state and home; with hope for the future usefulness of the republican party and with no bitterness or ill feeling towards any human being in the world.

(Signed)
CHASE S. OSBORN.

STREET CLEANING IN PHILADELPHIA.

Street cleaning in the city of Philadelphia is done under annual contracts, the city being divided into eight districts, and the work is under the supervision of the district engineers of the highway bureau and their corps of inspectors.

The specifications provide for the removal of ashes, waste and rubbish at least once each week from all buildings and for the cleaning of all streets six feet six inches in width or over, either by machine brooms, bycicegen or flushers, in accordance with the schedule. All equipment must be operated in accordance with a schedule which specifies the streets in the order in which they are to be cleaned with the various types of equipment. Squeegee machines, high pressure flushing machines and hand brooms are not used when the temperature conditions are such as to make their use undesirable, due to causing slippery streets in freezing weather. During the winter when the work cannot be done additional machine brooms and gangmen must be provided to clean the streets with the frequency called for.

Collections are made daily, except Sunday, in all sections of the city from residences. Garbage from retail grocaries and butchers dealers is collected daily in quantities not exceeding one bushel from each store or stand. Dead animals are also removed by the contract contractor. The wagons used for the collection of garbage are one and two horse metal bodied wagons, water tight, and of a capacity of one and one half to two and one-half cubic yards. The garbage is handled in the plant of the contractor and disposed of by the reduction method.—American City.

BUILDING UP A NEW TOWN.

An Authoritative Statement Regarding Scotch Fire Clay Out.

An authentic statement revealing the plan given out which might be regarded as the first authoritative and definitive statement in regard to the town planning of the new city to be erected in the vicinity of Port Huron, and within the extended bury boundaries of Lauferemon, Sevelland, was delivered by Hallie James Norval, Dunfermline, at a recent meeting of the Young Poets society.

Dealing with the roads of the new town, Hallie Norval said the main feature would be a triangular system. The principal thoroughfare, Primrose avenue, would be 200 feet wide, extending from Primrose farm to the proposed site for the new railway station to the east of the entrance to Pittsevie castle, which formed the base of an equilateral triangle of main roads. The apex of that triangle would be the entrance to the admiral's reserve ground.

Dealing with the housing, Hallie Norval said that, so far as possible, the cottage type of artisan dwelling would be built, except on the main main roads, where blocks of a different character would be allowed. There were forty-one acres of open space in the admiralty ground, and ninety-four acres on Pittsevie estate would be laid out as a golf course, with a further twenty-eight acres on the same estate as a public open space. Land kindly had also contributed in this respect.

The population would be about 30,000 within ten years, this figure being based upon reliable information received from the admiralty.

The pleasures we best enjoy is that we have divided with others

Frank D. Scott's Platform.

TO THE EDITOR:

Through the columns of your paper I desire to formally announce that I will be a candidate for Representative in Congress in the Eleventh Congressional District, on the Republican ticket, at the primaries on August 25, 1914.

That I am ambitious is undeniable, but I have deferred making any announcement in order that I might ascertain whether a goodly number of citizens in this district considered me worthy and qualified to fill this important position, and I feel now that I have somewhat determined that sentiment. My candidacy is being encouraged and supported by the laboring men, farmers, merchants, business and professional men of this entire Congressional district, not by word of mouth have they encouraged it but approximately five thousand citizens from the various walks of life, without my personal solicitation, have subscribed their assurance of confidence and support over their own signatures, and I therefore feel justified in submitting to the electors of this district my candidacy.

In this announcement I deem it not improper to state a few of the things for which I stand and which I believe, if followed and adopted, would result beneficially to the people of this country.

They are as follows:

FIRST: A protective tariff which will protect the farmer, laboring man and also the manufacturer who is entitled to protection.

SECOND: Governmental ownership and control of the railroads.

THIRD: Governmental maintenance of and contribution to public highways.

FOURTH: National protective and regulative labor laws.

FIFTH: Conservation and reservation of mineral rights on government lands.

SIXTH: To be the servant of the people, not the boss.

I have been a lifelong Republican; not as a business, but through a conviction that its policies are most conducive to the general welfare and betterment of the people of this country. I have served in the Michigan State Senate for the past four years and I invite and solicit an examination of my record in that body. A year ago I was unanimously chosen as President Pro Tem of the Senate and in that capacity, as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee and a member of several other important committees, I had the privilege and opportunity of a real schooling in legislative experience which I feel and hope has fitted me for the position to which I aspire.

While a member of the Senate it was my aim to represent the people of this senatorial district. To ascertain their judgment I sent out thousands of letters and I believe my record will show and the sentiment that I did represent rather than dictate, and I wish to assure the electors of the Eleventh Congressional District that, should I be favored with the nomination and election, I will make my record, as your Representative in Congress, a reality and not a mimomer.

Very sincerely,

FRANK D. SCOTT.

East Jordan Enterprise: Mr. Fred Boomsnger arrived Saturday from Cleveland, O., where he is now located, having stopped off at Kansas while enroute to visit relatives. Mr. Boomsnger is not in excellent health, and says he has not had a drink of real good water since leaving East Jordan. He is again in the mercantile trade, in one of the Cleveland suburbs.

Traverse City Record: Fishing records in the Grand Traverse region for this year were broken on the grounds Saturday night when Frank Kimmrey, George Kastner and Glen Sundquist captured a rock sturgeon which weighed 104 pounds and measured six feet six inches over all. It took half an hour to land the monster after he was hooked and not to be killed in the water before he could be landed in the boat. It has been a long time since a sturgeon of this size has been caught in these waters as this variety of fish which was once so common has become nearly extinct.

Petoskey News: The home of Mrs. W. C. Niles, at Walloon Lake, was destroyed by fire about 8 o'clock Tuesday evening. The blaze was seen for miles around and a large crowd gathered. Little could be done because of the lack of fire apparatus. The house had been under process of cleaning during the day preparatory to being occupied by station agent Rau for the summer. Mr. Rau and his family were expected Wednesday to take possession. The fire was evidently caused by the fire used during the day by the cleaners. A part of the furniture was saved but the house is a total loss. Insurance was carried on both the house and furniture. Mrs. Niles is the mother of James Niles of this city.

THE POPULAR VEILS.

Colored Lining Gives Chic to the New Headwear.

The latest beauty veil is made of the black silk under veils not and black and white chiffon veils. This brilliant lining of black velvet adds a touch of artistic polish, seems full at the corner of the mouth. This is a veil that becomes well, flattering to the complexion and very comfortable to wear.

Another beauty veil which is a great favorite in Paris is made of pale heliotrope and violet chiffon with a cream of black patches. On fine complexions, pale blue is very effective. This veil is now made of colored tulle in a considerable variety of shades.

For ordinary wear the favorite veil is that made of fine black silk tulle and dotted all over with white pin spots. This rose tulle dotted with white is also admirably becoming, and for women who go for looking smart one can recommend the new veils in checks like those of the white dotted with black and white pin spots and dotted with black tulle and pin spots.

A great deal depends upon the veil. Some of the loveliest hats are worn by real beauties. Others merely make the skin look hard or coarse. It is a fine line to strike a perfectly artistic style of veil when it has been found to be becoming.

Season Tickets for Our Forthcoming Redpath Chautauqua

In arranging to inaugurate this chautauqua this year the local committee bought 1,000 $2.50 season tickets, which will be sold, while they last, by them for $2.00 each.

When these tickets are exhausted no season tickets thereafter can be had for less than $2.50. Also, the price of season tickets will not be reduced from the first day to the close of the chautauqua.

The single admissions to the different sessions of this chautauqua aggregate more than $8.00, so it will pay you to buy a season ticket even after the program is half completed. East Jordan Enterprise: Mr. Fred Rossmiter arrived Saturday from Cleveland, O., where he is now located, having stopped off at Lansing while enroute to visit relatives. Mr. Rossmiter is not in excellent health, and says he has not had a drink of real good water since leaving East Jordan. He is again in the mercantile trade, in one of the Cleveland suburbs.

Traverse City Record: Fishing records in the Grand Traverse region for this year were broken on the preliminary Saturday night when Frank Kilmurray, George Kastner and Glen Sunquist captured a rock sturgeon which weighed 104 pounds and measured six feet six inches over all. It took half an hour to land the monster after he was hooked and had to be killed in the water before he could be landed in the boat. It has been a long time since a sturgeon of this size has been caught in these waters as this variety of fish which was once so common has become nearly extinct.

Petoskey News: The home of Mrs. W. C. Niles, at Walloon Lake, was destroyed by fire about 8 o'clock Tuesday evening. The blaze was seen for miles around and a large crowd gathered. Little could be done because of the lack of fire apparatus. The house had been under way of cleaning during the day preparatory to being occupied by station agent Ball for the summer. Mr. Ball and his family were expected Wednesday to take possession. The fire was evidently caused by the fire used during the day by the cleaners. A part of the furniture was saved but the house is a total loss. Insurance was carried on both the house and furniture. Mrs. Niles is the mother of James Niles of this city.

STREET CLEANING IN PHILADELPHIA.

Work Is Done Under Annual Contracts With Supervision of Highway Bureau.

Street cleaning in the city of Philadelphia is done under annual contracts, the city being divided into eight districts, and the work is under the supervision of the district engineers of the highway bureau and their corps of inspectors.

The specifications provide for the removal of ashes, waste and rubbish at least once each week from all buildings and for the cleaning of all streets are free as inches in width or over, either by machine brooms, sweepers or flushers, in accordance with the schedule. All equipment must be operated by competent, sober and reliable men, and the streets in the order in which they are to be cleaned with the various types of equipment. Sprinkling machines, high pressure flushing machines and sprinklers are not used when the temperature conditions are such as to make their use inadvisable, due to causing slippery streets in freezing weather. During the winter when this work cannot be done additional machine brooms and gangmen must be provided to clean the streets with the frequency called for.

Collections are made daily, except Sunday, in all sections of the city from residences. Garbage from retail grocers and fruit dealers is collected daily in quantities not exceeding one bushel from each store or stand. Ashes and rubbish are also removed by the garbage contractor. The wagons used for the collection of garbage are one and two horse metal bodied wagons, water tight and of a capacity of one and one-half to two and one-half cubic yards. The garbage is hauled to the plant of the contractor and disposed of by the reduction method.—American City.

BUILDING UP A NEW TOWN.

An Authoritative Statement Regarding Scotch Pine Grove Out.

An authentic statement regarding the plan given out, what might be regarded as the first automotive and detailed statement in regard to the actual planning of the new city to be erected in the vicinity of Pocahontas, disclosed and within the extensive land boundaries of Dunfermline Heights, was delivered by Hattie James Norval, Dunfermline, at a recent meeting of the Vesta Club society.

Dealing with the roads of the new town, Hattie Norval said the main feature would be a triangular system. The principal thoroughfare, Primrose avenue, would be 200 feet wide, extending from Primrose farm to the proposed site for the new railway station to the east of the entrance to Pittsyrefie estate, which formed the base of an equilateral triangle of main roads. The apex of that triangle would be the entrance to the admiralty reserve ground.

Dealing with the housing, Hattie Norval said that, so far as possible, the cottage type of artisan dwelling would be built, except on the wide main roads, where blocks of a different character would be allowed. There were forty-one acres of open space in the Admiralty ground and ninety-four acres on Pitsyrefie estate would be laid out as a golf course. With a further twenty-eight acres on the same estate as a public open space Lord Elgin had also contributed in this respect.

The population would be about 30,000 within ten years, this figure being based upon reliable information received from the admiralty.

The pleasure we feel enjoy is that we have divided with others.

Frank D. Scott's Platform.

TO THE EDITOR:

Through the columns of your paper I desire to formally announce that I will be a candidate for Representative in Congress in the Eleventh Congressional District, on the Republican ticket, at the primaries on August 25, 1914.

That I am ambitious is undeniable, but I have deferred making any announcement in order that I might ascertain whether a goodly number of citizens in this district considered me worthy and qualified to fill this important position, and I feel now that I have somewhat determined that sentiment. My candidacy is being encouraged and supported by the laboring men, farmers, merchants, business and professional men of this entire Congressional district, not by word of mouth have they encouraged it but approximately five thousand citizens from the various walks of life, without my personal solicitation, have subscribed their assurance of confidence and support over their own signatures, and I therefore feel justified in submitting to the electors of this district my candidacy.

In this announcement I deem it not improper to state a few of the things for which I stand and which I believe, if followed and adopted, would result beneficially to the people of this country.

They are as follows:

FIRST: A protective tariff which will protect the farmer, laboring man and also the manufacturer who is entitled to protection.

SECOND: Governmental ownership and control of the railroads.

THIRD: Governmental maintenance of and contribution to public highways.

FOURTH: National protective and regulative labor laws.

FIFTH: Conservation and reservation of mineral rights on government lands.

SIXTH: To be the servant of the people, not the boss.

I have been a lifelong Republican; not as a business, but through a conviction that its policies are most conducive to the general welfare and betterment of the people of this country. I have served in the Michigan State Senate for the past four years and I invite and solicit an examination of my record in that body. A year ago I was unanimously chosen as the President Pro Tem of the Senate and in that capacity, as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee and a member of several other important committees, I had the privilege and opportunity of a real schooling in legislative experience which I feel and hope has fitted me for the position to which I aspire.

While a member of the Senate it was my aim to represent the people of this senatorial district. To ascertain their judgment I sent out thousands of letters and I believe my record will bear out the assertion that I did represent rather than dictate, and I wish to assure the electors of the Eleventh Congressional District that, should I be favored with the nomination and election, I will make my record in the House of Representatives in Congress, a reality and not a mirror.

Very sincerely,

FRANK D. SCOTT.

Mister Voter of Charlevoix County

In this issue I am making my formal announcement as a candidate for the Republican nomination for County Clerk. I know very little about politics, but I have a knowledge of bookkeeping that will be of value if I am successful in securing the office. I am not a candidate at the solicitation of my friends, although they have been very kind since I have declared my intentions, but because I decided that I want to be the next County Clerk, and if you can conscientiously support a young man who is working as hard as any candidate in the field, your efforts will be strongly appreciated.

Respectfully, T. O. BISSELL,

VILLA QUITS ARMY

REBEL, ANGERED BY UNSUCCESSFUL ATTACK ON CITY, RESIGNS.

NEW COMMANDER IS SOUGHT

Natera's Attempt to Take Federal Stronghold Without Orders Causes Action U. S. Envoys Green Carranza's Agents.

Saltillo, June 15.—The resignation of General Villa was confirmed here on Tuesday. A delegation is now en route from Torreon to select a new commander for Villa's army.

Felipe Angeles, Carranza's secretary of war, is likely to be chosen Villa will be military governor of Chihuahua, where he will replace Fidel Avila, who is now acting.

Villa's withdrawal is said to be the outgrowth of General Natera's attempt to take Zacatecas without orders.

It is reported at El Paso, Tex., that Villa has asked General Carranza's offices at Juarez.

A split with Carranza resulted on Tuesday.

General Villa ordered that all commerce be prohibited throughout the territory he controls report at once at Torreon.

This order was accepted immediately by observers. History of the Porfirio Orozco rebellion against President Madero was revived. Orozco, like Villa, was a leader of volunteer troops of Chihuahua state, and a favorite.

Carranza's offices at Juarez were sealed by Villa supporters.

Similar statures were authenticated. Reported to have taken place at Chihuahua City and at Torreon, where Villa remained all day.

The retreat of the offices in Juarez was taken as conclusive evidence of the long-expected split between Carranza, leader of the constitutionalist revolution, and Villa, his most successful lieutenant. This, with the taking over of Carranza offices at Chihuahua City and Torreon, evidently placed the entire northern part of Mexico in the power of Villa and his followers.

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 15.—Justice Lamar and Frederick W. Lehmann, the American delegates to the mediation conference, went to Buffalo today and remained for four hours with Rafael Zubaran and Luis Cabrera, personal representatives of General Carranza. Their purpose was to find some way to bring the constitutional factions into harmony with the scope of mediation. The mission was a failure.

The constitutionalist representatives, who had come from Washington especially to see Mr. Lehmann, delegate, told them why they could not agree to an armistice, why only a man prominent in the constitutionalist ranks would be accepted by them for the provisional presidency, and finally they said they believed the constitutionalist army would settle the Mexican business, even if left unhampered by foreign complications.

BRITONS TAKE POLO CUP

U. S. Team Loses Trophy in Most Brilliantly Contested Game in History of Sport—Score is 4 to 2½.

Westbury, N. Y., June 18.—The international polo challenge cup goes to England by virtue of its second victory over the Americans by a score of 4 to 2½. Both teams scored a half goal in the last period for foulling, making the score up to Englands 4. The game was witnessed by 40,000 per sons.

The game was the most bitterly contested and the most brilliantly fought game in polo history. It also abounded with sensational plays from start to finish, and the wonderful, reckless riding of the men on both teams sent the crowd crazy with delight over the marvelous horsemanship.

The Americans lost their game not because they were outplayed, but because in their desperate effort to win they committed many fouls by riding in front of the English, who had the right of way. Each foul play cost them half a goal, and these fouls accounted them the loss of the game.

The Americans throughout the game showed a team work that was far superior to that of the English.

Devereux Milburn, playing in his old position at No 4, easily was the star of the game. Cheape again was the big factor in England's victory.

The official lineup follows:

England.	United States.

1—Lord Wodehouse.	1—Max Ilvin.
2—Lord Cavan.	2—Devereux Milburn.
3—Lord Wrottesley.	3—Robert Strauss.

Portland, Me., June 15.—Mayor Oakley C. Curtis of Portland won the Democratic nomination for governor at Monday's state convention. Other nominees on hand, Governor Haines (Rep.) was renominated without opposition.

Milford, Mass., June 18.—Seven lodgers were burned to death, twenty others were injured and two will die and twenty-three were injured, leaping from windows in a fire that destroyed a lodging house.

NAME REBEL ENVOYS

CARRANZA SELECTS AGENTS TO ATTEND PEACE PARLEY.

Mediation Protocol Signed at Niagara Falls by U. S. Delegates and Huerta Envoys.

Washington, June 15.—Gen. Venustiano Carranza, first chief of the constitutionalist forces in Mexico, has appointed his delegates, three in number, to the Niagara mediation conference. They are:

Jose Vasconcelos, former confidential agent of Carranza in Canada, now attached to the constitutionalist legation in Washington.

General Carranza named these delegates in a telegram received by Rafael Zubaran from the constitutionalist chief. This was Carranza's reply to the mediators' last note to him. The message was forwarded by Senor Zubaran by mail to the mediators at Niagara Falls.

It is stated positively and on authority by a correspondent that:

1. The Carranza note makes no allusion to an armistice, and, in fact, wholly ignores the intimation of the mediators in their note of June 2, which told the first chief of the constitutionalists that their delegates would be received only if the situation as to an armistice were adjusted to by the constitutionalists.

2. There is nothing in the Carranza note indicating any willingness on his part to consent to the discussion by his delegates, if they are admitted at Niagara, of the internal affairs of the Mexican people.

3. There is nothing in the Carranza note indicating that his delegates are to attend on any other terms than those which he himself has named in his earlier letters to the A-B-C envoys.

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 15.—Delegates from the United States and the Huerta government formally affixed their signatures in the presence of the mediating representatives of Argentina, Brazil and Chile to the first protocol of the series through which it is hoped to restore peace in Mexico.

SUFFRAGE IS VALID

THREE JUDGES OF ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT DISSENT AS TO LAW'S CONSTITUTIONALITY.

"WETS" ARE HIT BY RULING

Decision of Highest Tribunal Means That Women Have Right to Vote in State for Presidential Electors and All Statutory Offices.

Springfield, Ill., June 16.—Woman's right to the ballot in Illinois has been upheld by the supreme court. By the vote of 4 to 3 the justices decided that the equal suffrage law was constitutional.

Justice Frank W. Dunn of Charleston wrote the majority opinion, in which he was joined by Justice James H. Cartwright of Oregon, Justice Orrin N. Carter of Chicago and Justice Alonzo K. Vickers of East St. Louis (Ill.) Republican.

Three separate dissenting opinions were filed by Justice George A. Cooke of Aledo, Justice Charles C. Craig of Salamora and Justice William H. Farmer of Vandalia.

The justices who dissented contend that the granting of women the right to vote is in violation of the state constitution.

The majority opinion, which becomes the decree of the court, holds the Illinois legislature did not go beyond its constitutional powers in granting the right to women to vote for all statutory officers, which includes presidential electors, as set out in the 1913 act, and that the act in all of its details is "good."

By the terms of the decision the entire act is held constitutional, including the right to vote at local option elections and on all "little ballot" questions which are not specifically forbidden by the constitution.

The majority decision holds that women have the right to vote on local option questions, inasmuch as such questions are not mentioned in the constitution. In other words, the court holds that on all questions and offices provided for by the legislature that the legislature has the power and authority to say who shall vote upon such questions.

Chicago, June 16.—Anti-suffrage records of agitation and the singing of "Illinois" and other patriotic songs, woman suffrage was nearly unanimously indorsed by the twelfth biennial convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs meeting in the Auditorium theater. When the result of the vote was announced by President Pennybacker, the entire assemblage arose and gave a shout of joy.

He was elected to congress in 1874 in a district which hitherto had given a Republican 2,000 plurality. Later President Cleveland selected Adlai Stevenson as first assistant postmaster general in his first administration, and Stevenson married Miss Letitia Green of Danville, Ky.

PASSES REPEAL BILL

HOUSE CONCURS IN SENATE AMENDMENTS BY 216 TO 71.

Now Awaits the Signature of President Wilson—Vote of Upper House on Bill.

Washington, June 15.—The house of representatives accepted on Friday the Panama coast tolls exemption act as amended by the senate by a vote of 216 to 71. The bill will be rushed to the president for his signature, he having indicated to his leaders in the house that he would approve it.

Washington, June 15.—The senate tolls repeal bill was passed by the senate on Thursday night, it carrying the Norris-Simmons amendment. The vote was 56 to 35. The measure now goes to the house.

Senator Simmons, leader of the repeal forces, overcame the wish of Senator Norris, of Nebraska, and Senator Clarke, of Arkansas, to obtain prompt votes on all amendments by the simple process of moving to table each one as it was offered. This motion immediately cuts off debate and results in a vote, but the senator feared that this method would result in so much friction that the debate on the passage of the bill itself would be prolonged.

With the Norris-Simmons amendment added during the debate the American rights with regard to the dispute with Great Britain over the construction of the treaty are in some measure preserved. With this amendment the repeal bill was stripped down to its real purpose.

The vote by which the bill was passed was as follows:

Ayes—Democrats: Bankhead, Bryan, Chilton, Clark (Ark.), Culberson, Fletcher, Gore, Hitchcock, Hughes, James, Jones, Kern, Lea, Lewis, Martin, Myers, Owen, Pittman, Pomerene, Saulsbury, Shafroth, Shepard, Shively, Simmons, Smith (Ark.), Smith (Ga.), Smith (Md.), Smith (S. C.), Stone, Swanson, Thompson, Thornton, Vardaman, Walsh, Williams—37.

Total for the bill, 50.

Nays—Democrats: Ashurst, Chamberlain, Lang, Martine, Newlands, O'Gorman, Ransdell, Reed, Shields, Thomas, Vardaman—11.

Total against bill, 35.

MINERS RIOT AT BUTTE, MONT.

Men Recede From Federation Because of Assessments—Mayor Thrown From Building and Hurt.

Butte, Mont., June 15.—Butte is virtually under mob rule, with its saloons locked tight and with every hardware store closed of all its arms and ammunition by the police as the result of the series of riots during the shortest month since the thirty-fourth anniversary of the establishment of the union, the Butte miners' union, with upwards of 5,000 members, is divided against itself. More than two thousand miners have refused to recognize the union further because of a recent decision of the organization to levy a special assessment of $5 on each member, which brought the union's treasury up to $100,000. Mayor Wright, one of the leaders of the anti-federation faction, was thrown from the top of a building and badly hurt.

The revolution has completed part of the work. But a vast amount remains to be done. It is not believed the commission will be able to report much before a month.

BANK BOARD NAMED

TO NAME GOVERNOR LATER

Charles S. Hamlin, P. M. Warburg, T. D. Jones, W. C. P. Harding and A. C. Miller Are Appointed—Banks Are In Good Condition.

Washington, June 17.—Charles S. Hamlin of Massachusetts, assistant secretary of the treasury, was nominated by President Wilson on Monday to be a member of the federal reserve board for two years.

Paul M. Warburg of New York for a term of four years.

Thomas D. Jones of Illinois for a term of six years.

W. C. P. Harding of Alabama for a term of eight years.

A. C. Miller of California, assistant secretary of the interior, for a term of ten years.

The president also nominated John B. McGaraen of Denver, Colo., to be surveyor general of Colorado.

The declination of Simmons of St. Louis made way for Hamlin's appointment after he had been temporarily dropped from consideration.

August 1 is the date set around upon by administration officials for the inauguration of the federal reserve system.

Comptroller of the Currency John Skelton Williams has announced on July 1 the balloting for directors of the reserve banks in classes A and B will have been completed.

The condition of the banks in the wheat belt at the present time is looked upon by secretary McAdoo and other officials as most favorable. The farmers in the wheat belt already are beginning to harvest a bumper crop, and although the demands on the banks for money are being made earlier than usual, the demands on the banks for money are being met without much strain on the system.

The strain of friction at the time when the greatest strain on the banks is felt is looked upon to be the direct effect of the passage of the new currency law.

But should the strain on the banks in the wheat regions become too great to be met by the ordinary means, it is expected that the regional reserve system will be in full operation in time to forestall any desperation.

Following this first call upon the functions of the new system will come the big demand for the moving of the autumn crops. But by that time it is expected that every cog in the new system will be working so smoothly that no obstacle will be encountered which cannot be overcome with alacrity.

The selection of Thomas D. Jones of Chicago merely as one of the members of the federal reserve board comes somewhat as a surprise in view of the fact that it was confidently expected that Jones would be named as governor of the board. President Wilson, however, has decided that he will not name the governor for some time to come.

Jones is a Chicago lawyer, a former Princeton university trustee and a personal friend of the president.

RAILROADS WIN AND LOSE

Flat Raise of Rates Denied, But Increases of 1 to 5 Per Cent Are Given Where Justified.

Washington, June 17.—The salient points of the decision of the interstate commerce commission on the petition of the railroads of the eastern division of the country for a five per cent increase in rates are:

1. The commission will deny the application for a flat increase of three per cent.

2. However, it will grant increases ranging from one to five per cent but perhaps higher in commodities now carried at low cost.

3. It will decline to make advances on certain other commodities.

4. The public will be emphatically warned that the increases ordered do not justify any increase in the prices of food or other necessities.

5. The railroads will be denounced for engaging in a gigantic conspiracy to create a public sentiment in favor of the five per cent increase and against the commission.

The task of making equitable rates upon the thousand upon thousand commodities is a tremendous one, and is responsible for the delay of the commission in filing its decision. Practically every railroad in the east is represented in the labor further delay by organization of the union, which has been composed of more than half the labor bodies of the city. Alderman Frank Curran, acting as mayor of the city, a Republican, was thrown from a second story window to the pavement.

400,000 Settlers a Year

Immigration figures show that the population of Canada increased by nearly 1,013, by the addition of 400,000 new settlers from the United States and Europe. Most of these have gone on farms in provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

"The possibilities and opportunities offered by the Canadian West are so much greater than those which exist on England, that it seems absurd to me that people should be induced from coming to the country where they can better their positions materially improve their position.

BANKERS ARE EAGER TO SHOW FRIENDSHIP FOR THE FARMER

By H. J. DANIELS.

The farmers of western and northern Michigan "should worry" over the way the banks in those sections of the state are backing down on them. Why? There never was a time in the history of Michigan when so much was made of the farmers by the bankers as now. The bankers are literally falling over each other in the scramble to show the farmers that the banks are their friends and that the farmers' good friend. And, indeed, they are. Many a bank is doing more for the promotion of western and northern Michigan than many farmers are. And, too, many a bank official is becoming a good farmer, and that, too, without having any direct interest in any farm under the heavens. The prosperity that comes to the farm comes also to the bank, and the bank pays the salaries.

The bank now finds that does not take interest in the farming conditions in its section is the bank that the farmers are not taking much interest in. With corn, wheat, apples, cabbages, or potato exhibits, the banks are doing their share of the general farm promotion. The rivalry that exists between the banks is becoming so keen, and the competition so keen, are being worked out on their own. One announces a cover or alfalfa exhibit, and next week the boiler brand another bank having started a new potato contest and exhibit. The farmer has to be undone, a third bank will issue a beautiful illustrated booklet on fruit growers particulars regarding the proper time for spraying trees, in order that the apple and other fruit and forage diseases may be properly controlled. Another bank issues the information to farmers that will enable them to know the best way of treating potato seed that will make them immune against disease. And all announcements are accompanied by information good for the farmers to know through the medium of free lectures.

And thus it goes. The banks are in it up to their necks, and having once started in to help the farmers, they have started an educational campaign they can hardly withdraw from, for a long time, without being accused as quitters. Meanwhile the farmers, who do not already know it, are to receive some good news.

CHURCH WEDDING OF GREAT BEAUTY

Miss Harriet Bates Becomes Bride of Galo E. Hines, in Ceremony Performed Last Evening

What was perhaps the most beautifully arranged and carried out, as well as the largest wedding ever held in Corona, was consummated last night in the auditorium of the First Baptist church, when Harriet Lois, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Bates, became the bride of Galo E. Hines of Charlevoix, Michigan.

The church was packed to its capacity by the invited guests. The auditorium was profusely decked with pepper branches, palm leaves and forest interspersed with pink and lavender flowers, the color scheme being green, lavender and pink.

Shortly after the hour of eight, Mr. Walter English with his fine bass voice sang "Come to Me" from Dansa, accompanied on the piano by Mrs. George E. Tucker, a well known musician of Riverside.

This was followed by Lohengrin's bridal chorus played by Mrs. Tucker at the piano and Mrs. W. O. Hife, a sister of the bride, on the violin. The bridal chorus was sung by the following young ladies: Misses Marcia and Jessie Hunt, Emily and Carol Jameson, Ione Smith, Fay Gleason, Amanda Dievendorf, Bernice Fairbanks, Eloise, Bernice, Hettie and Adelaide Jameson, and Mesdames P. L. Sibly and Joy Jameson. The members of the bridal chorus marched slowly through the south wing of the church and took their places in the choir loft.

Then came the four bridesmaids, Miss Lucy Nicholls of Pomona; and Ethel Somerville, Hilda Glion and Helen Hill of this city. They wore handsome lavender dresses of the latest mode, and seraphine hats of lavender tulle.

In a few seconds came the bride, a handsome young lady of the brunette type, dressed in a rich gown of brocaded charmeuse and chiffon, trimmed with pearl beads, silver butterflies and baby Irish lace. Her long veil was decked with orange blossoms, while she carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley.

She entered the south door of the church, leaning on the arm of her father. They were preceded down the center aisle by Earl Jameson, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Jameson, who scattered rose petals before the procession.

Following the bride came the maid of honor, Miss Grace Hight of Long Beach, who was Miss Bates' roommate at Pomona college. She was dressed in a beautiful gown of pink and white silk.

As the bride and her attendants marched slowly down the center aisle of the church to the strains of Lohengrin's bridal chorus, the ministers Rev. B. B. Jacques of Pasadena and Rev. F. W. Reynolds of this city, followed by the groom and his best man John Upright of Los Angeles, entered the auditorium from the northwest doorway and slowly wended their way to chancel rail, preceded by little Albert Bates, the six year old brother of the bride. He was ring bearer and carried the band of gold in a magnolia blossom.

The ushers Bertram Dunham, Henry Jameson, Eaton Blickhahn and J. W. Hay, shrey, the latter of Riverside, met the bridal party at the same time that the ministers, groom and best man did, and here the father of the bride gave her away. During this part of the ceremony Mrs. Simms sang very sweetly, "Constancy."

Just after the giving away of the bride, the ministers followed by the bride and groom, the maid of honor, the best man, the flower girl and the ring bearer, all took their places on the white platform where Rev. B. B. Jacques, assisted by F. W. Reynolds, performed the ceremony which made the two one, using the impressive Episcopal ring service.

Immediately after the ceremony Mrs. Tucker played Mendelssohn's wedding march by which the bridal party left the church followed by the fourteen young ladies in the bridal chorus, who were prettily attired in snow white dresses.

Leaving the church the happy couple went to the convention Bates home on South Main street, at the corner of Tenth, where a reception was tendered them. Invited guests of the wedding to the number of 150 here extended their congratulations to the newlyweds. In one of the upper rooms the wedding presents were on display. They included cut glass, silver, linen and many miscellaneous articles, their numbers attested in a small way to the hosts of friends in which the bride is held by her many friends.

Refreshments of brick ice cream and cake were served to the guests before leaving.

The couple left late last night for Suttons, where they went by auto. This morning they returned to Riverside, where they were met by the bride's parents who will accompany them on a short honeymoon to Los Angeles and the beaches. Returning to Corona probably Sunday. The happy couple will remain here for one or two days, when they will leave for Charlevoix, Mich., where they will make their home.

The bride is one of Corona's popular and accomplished young ladies. She graduated with the class of '05 from Corona High School, taking one year at Pomona college in 1910. She is a musician of widely acknowledged ability, and a popular member of the country club. If we are moving from this city Corona loses a fine young lady and Charlevoix, Michigan gains one.

Last Friday evening the sheriff of Mackinaw county called up Jamer Freeman, of this city, asking him to come north with "Sue," the bloodhound, stating that a 75-year old German lady had wandered from her home near Allenville, and could not be found. Fred took the dog to St. Ignace and in four hours after the dog took the trail they found the old lady standing by a tree in the center swamp. Good work for Fred and "Sue."

His Own Fault.

"Out of a job, are you, Tarby?"

"Yes; they got my scalp finally."

"How long had you held that office?"

"About thirty years. And it's pretty tough on me to have to take up some new occupation to make a living."

"Haven't you got enough to live on?"

"I should say not!"

Looking at him with discust, "Tarby, you make me tired. You're not fit to hold a public office."—Chicago Tribune.

THE WEST MICHIGAN PIKE

The Annual Tour Next Week Expected to be a Gorgeous Affair

The West Michigan Pike is a Reality, with a big, big B. Our George (the Old Bonnay Van Dell), has been busy since his arrival here, about a month or six weeks ago, getting silverlined money for the Booklet, and the road signs.

George is one of our hot wires. He never fails to boost our little city, and "Good Roads" has been his hobby for years. He came near losing his scalp, and so did the booster, when at an early date Bridge street was almost impassible and he wrote (and the editor published) his letter, that he drove into town, but when he struck Bridge street he had to get a boat in order to get to Effie Bendan's dry goods store, and at the same time he had the audacity to say that the only business man in the city at that time was Mrs. Baker, who now, with her husband are the owners of the celebrated Beach Hotel, and the good Lord only knows how many cottages in connection with the same.

We are, however, digressing—we were writing of Van Pelt, the Good Road building devotee. "Hiny" and Swan—in other words—Van Pelt and Payton are going hand in hand, up and down the state working, and by their insistent, winning ways, accomplishing much good for the cause.

Monday, July 13th begins the Second Annual West Michigan Pike Tour, and for five days they, with the officials of the State Board of Health, will travel with their autos along the west coast of the lower peninsula, from Ludington to Norwood. It is a safe wager that they will not be allowed to get by this place, made famous for its beauty through the indomitable and consistent advertising of Geo. H. Van Pelt, for Van, his home, the beautiful and grand location, and the originator of The Farmers' Friendly Association, which was held for three successive seasons in his white birch grove and still finds the good fortune to attend any of those gatherings.

In addition to the Good Roads movement, Payton has been busy in behalf with the Home Mutual Development bureau, and the two make a team hard to beat.

Success to the Second Annual West Michigan Pike Tour. Charlevoix should have a number of visitors to offer them on their way. Fellow citizens, what can we do, or rather what can we do—for—the Bay Congress, when they pass through Thursday, the 16th, and what are the farmers doing to help the good roads along the right of way.

Rejected Correspondence

The SENTINEL is (or was, to be explicit), in receipt of a communication from Mr. W. E. Hampton, of this city, replying to certain criticism in recent issues of this paper of statements made over his signature in the Petoskey Progress. The communication of Mr. Hampton was not published.

We had hoped that this campaign would be conducted without personalities of a character that would lead Mr. Hampton to the Progress were so despicably false and unfair that we could not publish them. We do not believe that either Mr. Bayless or Mr. Scott have wings, but we believe they are both honest men, and a credit to their State and party.

We do not believe Mr. Hampton is a candidate for the Democratic pot office, and we did not say so; but we do say that the former congressional campaign involve the post office in their relation to the present congressional primary campaign.

Both these men are State Senators, chosen by their respective constituencies because of their ability and honesty. We are not on a muckraking expedition on Mr. Bayless' trail and we are not gathering a bucket of mud. We are supporting Senator Scott because, among other things being equal, (and we concede that they are), the republicans of this senatorial district owe no obligation to Bayless.

Just because Mr. Hampton and Joe Bayless happen to be personal friends is no reason why Charlevoix county republicans should go to the Soo for a candidate. If Mr. Bayless carries the primaries we will have no more loyal supporter than the publisher of this paper, and he will be the last one to utter unfair or false words to cough up. If Mr. Scott is nominated will the time here of Mr. Hampton be subject to an accusing conscience? Will he climb down from such the fence and support Frank Scott, like the good republican that of recent years he has professed to be?

For an organ in which to sing the praises of Mr. Bayless and abuse Mr. Scott, we refer the disappointed Charlevoix gentlemen to the left Rapids Progress. Nothing doing here.

COMPANY X INSPECTED

Inspector General Phillips Reviews and Compliments East Jordan Soldiers

Last Jordan's independent military organization, "Co. X," was officially inspected Tuesday night by Major M. J. Phillips, acting Inspector General. He is never "loud" in either praise or disapproval. He is a man of very serious temperament, and he is one of the "stiff" officer of the Michigan Regular Guard. The Major tells the officers and men that they were a "very creditable" organization, but he told the writer more than this.

The company was inspected at its armory, after which a street drill exhibited a precision and spirit that would do credit to a National Guard company. The men are armed with Lee-Remington rifles issued them by the government. Capt. Watson, a Spanish war veteran, commands the company. W. C. Spring, first lieutenant, and Leon Bibb, second lieutenant. The officers exhibit a remarkable aptitude, and the esprit de corps of the organization seems to be all that could be desired. The company turned out fifty men. They are neatly clad in regulation khaki and present a smart appearance in ranks. The Charlevoix soldier was elected an honorary member of the company.

After the inspection and drill a banquet was spread at the Taylor Inn, which was attended by the officers, and a number of leading citizens. Representative McMillan was toastmaster, and it was a merry occasion. Speeches were made by several, the last talk coming from Major Phillips. The Major reviewed the military situation with reference to possible active service outlined. His address was the event of the occasion, and did much to stimulate a military spirit in the hearts of both soldiers and citizens.

The league will be in Charlevoix Thursday evening of this week with the military State moving pictures.

It is expected that tickets will be sold prior to the date of the meeting for every seat in the house. No tickets will be sold at the door before 7:30. BETTER BABIES

Have You a Baby in Your Home? If So, Read This Announcement

Bay View assembly, among its other attractions this season, is to hold a Better Baby Contest, from July 22 to 26. It is perhaps better described as a Parents' Conference concerning their babies, their physical and mental condition and how to improve them.

It is for all babies, rich and poor, from six months to three years old, inclusive, except those with contagious or chronic diseases.

It is in charge of W. S. and Lena K. Sadler, eminent physicians of Chicago.

Those who read the Woman's Home Companion, know something of the value and popularity of these contests. This is no small affair; it is one of the largest ever put on at Bay View. It requires about fifty people to do the work.

There is no rivalry, no favoritism, no nice clothes are required. It is not a beauty show, to see who is the prettiest baby. The judges are physicians, and they test the babies by standards set up by experts in the care and feeding of children. From twenty-five to thirty examinations are given to each baby.

Bay View invites parents from Emmet and adjoining counties to all the privileges and benefits of the contests, the lectures and exhibits.

Is your baby healthy, happy babies? Would you like to see your baby well nourished, firm of flesh, smooth of skin, a fine baby?

Then come to the Better Baby Contest, have your baby tested by physicians—no fee—to know what a 100 per cent baby ought to be. If your baby is put up to the standard you will be told how to change his condition. For further information, write to Mrs. Jessie L. Rosenbaugh, general Chairman, Petoskey, Mich.

THE PRIMARY SCHOOL FUND

HAS BEEN GREATLY ENRICHED

By State Treasurer Who Decides to Pay Interest of $139,306.43 on Money

The primary school interest fund was enriched $139,306.43 Tuesday when State Treasurer Heaner transferred that amount from the general fund of the state treasury to the primary school interest fund.

This action was decided upon after Supt. of Public Instruction Fred L. Keeler had made a demand for the money, which is interest or penalties paid by corporations since 1907 upon failure to pay their specific taxes when due.

The amount was thought to be much more until it was discovered that a former demand, made several years ago, resulted in nearly a million dollars being paid the primary school interest fund.

This will mean that the per capita primary apportionment will be raised from $6.85 to $7.00, the interest transferring the fund 25 cents per capita.

Should the Pere Marquette and Ann Arbor railroad companies pay their state taxes, more than $1,000,000, the apportionment will be much larger.

Deputy State Treasurer German says there is plenty of money in the general fund to stand the transfer of funds, as the state tax levy for this year was much greater than formerly that the general fund is well cared for.

Petoskey News: Summer tourists in this region are raising a terrible howl about the condition of the roads. It seems that on several pieces of road, much good by tilling substantial work is being done just at this time and the roads are in bad shape. Some of these people have just cause for complaint for the roads should have been repaired before the middle of June or July at the latest instead of September. The people come here to spend their good money and plenty of it, and the roads should be made as good as possible for their use. On the other hand, the road builders have had a bad deal by the rain and cold weather earlier in the season and the work has necessarily been slow. Every one wants good roads and to have them every one must stand some of the inconvenience that come with good road building.

Petoskey News: A. M. Williams has been appointed manager of the Petoskey exchange of the Michigan State Telephone company to fill the position made vacant by the transfer of J. J. Kelley to Ann Arbor. Mr. Williams has been in the telephone business several years and managerial duties are not new to him. He had been working out of the district office and has had charge of toll line maintenance and inspection. Mr. Williams expects to bring his family to Petoskey in the early fall.

HAD EVENTFUL LIFE

T. S. HANSLEY WON FAME AS A MAGICIAN

Served in the Confederate Army and Came Here in the Early Seventies

T. S. Hansley, more familiarly known as "Professor," died at the county house last night after having a stroke of apoplexy a week ago, says the Traverse City Record. Mr. Hansley was possibly one of the best posted men on political questions in the country. While his body became feeble and distorted from rheumatism, his mind always remained fresh and bright. He was born seventy-six years ago in South Carolina and when in his teens became expert with cards and coins and was at one time considered the best manipulator of magic in the country. A few years ago he met Edward Fake, the leading sleight-of-hand expert and mystified him with his marvelous ability. When the civil war broke out Mr. Hansley enlisted under the confederate flag and always held to those ideas. He was married while living in the south, particular details will appear in that section with instructions for you to vote for one, or should there be more than one officer required, as in the case of county road commissioner, then the number required will be stated, and you have the privilege of voting for that number.

The parties will be divided into columns, the same as in a regular election ballot, with a circle at the head of the ticket. A cross placed in this circle indicates your party, the same as on a regular ballot. However, the important matter to be considered is the fact that you can vote for candidates in one party column only. You cannot vote for a candidate for sheriff in the Democratic column and a candidate for prosecutor in the Republican column. Should you do this, the one under your party column, which you had designated by the cross in the big circle at the top would count and your vote for the other office would be thrown out.

The Instructions say:

First: Designate your party by making a X in the circle at the head of the ticket you wish to vote.

(X) REPUBLICAN. or

(X) DEMOCRAT.

Or whatever party you may belong to.

Second: Place a cross (X) at the left of the names of as many candidates in your party column as there are to be nominated for each office. Thus:

[X] RICHARD ROE.

IMPORTANT—DO NOT VOTE FOR ANY CANDIDATE NOT IN YOUR PARTY COLUMN. If you do so it will VOID YOUR BALLOT as that nomination for that particular office are concerned.

Many people who have not given the matter any thought will say that this is not fair, that they should be permitted to vote for any candidate they choose, no matter what party column their name appeared in. We have heard several people say that this is another trick. The fact is it is to prevent a trick, and a simple one at that, that this rule is adopted. In the first place a party should be permitted to name their own candidates. If they were not, the opposing party could easily combine, vote to nominate the weakest candidate on the other party and easily defeat him at the election.

It would be an easy matter for the Republicans of this county, were the voters allowed to jump out of their party column, to nominate the weakest Democratic candidate on their ticket, and the same idea would apply to any part of the county and any instance. The new ballot is absolutely just to all parties.

NEW PRIMARY BALLOT DECIDEDLY DIFFERENT

Differs From Old Form as All Tickets Are Printed on One Ballot

There is apt to be no small amount of misunderstanding on the twenty-fifth page of the coming August regarding the new primary ballot and the manner in which it will have to be voted. The primary amendment feature in connection with primary elections has been abolished, so it does not matter how you are enrolled, you will be at liberty to vote any ticket you desire. Instead of separate tickets for each party, and the inspector giving you a ticket for the party for which you are enrolled, the roll book will not be used, and you will be given a ticket similar to a general election ticket, inasmuch as all parties and all candidates will appear on the ticket. However, instead of one candidate appearing in the section, the names of all the candidates seeking nomination for the office named in any particular section will appear in that section with instructions for you to vote for one, or should there be more than one officer required, as in the case of county road commissioner, then the number required will be stated, and you have the privilege of voting for that number.

The parties will be divided into columns, the same as in a regular election ballot, with a circle at the head of the ticket. A cross placed in this circle indicates your party, the same as on a regular ballot. JACOBS—ELLIS

At the home of the bride in this city Saturday, July 4, occurred the marriage of Miss Ethel M. Jacobs and Mr. Chas. G. Ellis of Petoskey.

The house was tastefully trimmed with ferns and flowers. The bridal party entered the parlor to the strains of music rendered by Miss Margaret Saunders and took their places beneath a bower of roses. Rev. Quinton Walker read the beautiful and impressive ring service of the Methodist Church. The bride was attended by Miss Marjorie Davies. Mr. Leland Cram acted as best man.

Miss Jacobs graduated from the high school of Charlevoix and also the Normal last June. She has a host of friends in the city. Mr. Ellis is in the postoffice department at Petoskey and is well and favorably known. The happy couple carry with them the best wisher of their Charlevoix friends.

The VALIANTS of VIRGINIA

By HALLIE ERMINIE RIVES

SYNOPSIS.

John Valiant, a rich society favorite, profoundly believes his father founded and owns the principal source of his family wealth, has failed. His volunteering forces him to propose to Miss Shirley Dandridge, a girl he does not love. The entire community is astonished when he announces his engagement. Lucy Dandridge, Shirley's sister, is the belle of the town, and a special estate in Virginia. Shirley Dandridge, engaged to John Valiant, is jealous besides that he is going to take Virginia to his father's estate, Mount Ararat, near Ridge, and Major Brinsley sackville, rich, handsome, and a bachelor, is there. Major Sackville named Sagamore were rivals for the affections of Lucy Dandridge. Lucy is jealous to which the former was willing. Valiant finds Shirley Dandridge and Major Sackville and engagement and decides to go to Mount Ararat, where he is a stranger, to settle his affairs. Knowing the fondness of his father, Shirley asks him to take her with him. Valiant arrives in the Valiant family home, Mount Ararat, and finds his father, Major Valiant, and his son, Valiant, home for football and Major Brinsley asked as his guest. Major Valiant, Major Sackville and Valiant become fast friends. Valiant, the elder, discovers Valiant, the younger, has inherited from his father a fortune in old walnut trees.

"I got over it, before I was old enough to make myself a butt of hilarity." The doctor returned. "I see by the papers they've invented a new dance called the grizzly bear. I believe there's another named the pigeyboodle. I hope you've got 'em down pat to show the young folk tonight, Bristow."

The major sat up with some irritation. "Southall," he said, "sometimes I'm tempted to think your remarks are verse upon the personal. You don't have to wait for me to dance if you don't choose to."

"Yes, thank God," muttered the doctor. "I prefer to remember you when you still preserved a trace of dignity—twenty odd years ago."

"If dignity—" the major's blood was rising now—"consists in your eternal tactless bacteriana, I want none of it. What on earth do you do it for? You had some friends once."

"Friends!" snapped the other. "The fewer I have the better!"

The major clapped on his straw hat angrily, strode to the door and opened it. But on the threshold he stopped, and presently shut it, turned back slowly and resumed his chair. The doctor was relighting his cigar, but as old furtive look had slipped to his face, and the hand that struck the match was unsteady.

For a time both sat smoking, at first in silence, then talking in a desultory vein of indifferent topics, finally the major rose and tossed his cigar into the empty grate.

"I'll be off now," he said. "I must be on the field before the others."

As he went down the steps a carriage, drawn by a pair of dancing grays, dashed past. "Who are those people with the Chalmers, I wonder," said the doctor, leaning out.

"The result of this attitude is imagined in the varied expressions of the faces with which spectators had watched him in the Court's adornment. Out of the kitchens Lassamia came egg-beating chatted like a watchman's rattle, while Aunt Dashie put down her ashing touches in an array of lighter colions dashled to grace the long table on the rear porch, now walled in with snow-white muslin and hung with Japanese lanterns. Under the tree's boughs Jefferson was even then experimenting with various punch compounds, and a delicious whiff of vanilla came to Valiant's nostrils.

The Red Road, as Valiant's carriage, was dotted with straggling pedestrians; humble country folk who trudged along the grassy roadsides with an eager regard for the swift cars and comfortable carriage that left them behind, sturdy, barefooted children who called shrilly after him, and happy-go-lucky negro youths out in their best with Sunday shoes dangling over their shoulders, something reardlessly in the direction well bound for the same Mecca, which presently rose before him, a gateway of painted lattice was proclaiming the field to which it opened Runnymede.

He halted his car at the end of the field and snapped a leash in the dog's collar. "I hate to do it, old man," he said apologetically to Chimo's—and—his lady, "but I've got to. There are to be some stunts, and it isn't exactly the thing for me to be convinced you're the main one of the contestants, which might cause a riot. Never mind! I'll make up to you when you won't miss anything."

With the excited dog tugging before him, he threaded his way through the press with keen satisfaction. Now and then his gloved hand touched his cap at a salutation. He was conscious of swift sidelong glances from pretty girls. Here was none of the rigid straightlaced stare of the secret stare of the city boulevard; the girls looked at him, frankly curious and inquiring, were full of easy open comradeship. Some of the girls were powdered and high-heeled, and something have issued from the Rise de la Paix; others were in simple cotton materials. But about the latter hung no hoydenish self-consciousness, they were themselves silks. He was beginning to realize that there might really be an amazed consciousness in the actual poverty, which yet created no sort of social difference.

Opposite the canvas-covered grand stand, set twelve small swinging booths, each with a staff and tiny flag. Midway lines of flaxen ropes stretched between rows of slender peeled ash limbs from whose tops floated fantastic streamers of vivid bunting, a pavilion of purple cloth, open at the sides, curved brim was wound with a shaded silver, the same tint. Her mother was not with her, she was not sorry for his way as he passed—her mind at the moment being held out to an amorous gesture toward a little child in a smiling matron's lap—and but a strange emotion was—unknown to him before the major seized upon him and bore him to the purple pavilion, for he was one of the committee.

But for this distraction, he might have seen, entering the stand with the Chalmers just as the band struck up a delicious whirl of "Dixie," the two strangers whom the doctor had observed an hour before as they whirled past the Mercy's hotel, Miss Sackville on the judge's grays. Silas Fargo might have passed in his gathering for the unobtrusive city man. Kathrine was noticeable anywhere, and today he left willowy figures in the champagne-color lingerie gown and hat trimmed with bronze and gold tints, setting in relief her ivory statuesque face, drew a wave of whispered comment which left a brilliant wake behind him. The party made a picturesque group as they now disposed themselves. Kathrine's colors lent loveliness contrasting with the sear sparkle of pretty Nancy Chalmers and the grey-blue beauty of Betty Page.

"Can call it a tournament, don't you?" asked Kathrine of the judge.

"Yes," he replied. "It's a kind of tournament in which twelve riders compete for the privilege of naming a Queen of Beauty. There's a ball tonight, at which the lucky lady is crowned. There little tents are where the noble knights don their shining armor, too, then go their caparisoned chargers."

A file of negroes was approaching the tents, each leading a horse whose saddle and bridle were decorated with wisps of various hues. In the cousel of the roped lists, directly in front of the stand, others were planting upright in the ground a tall pole from whose top projected a horizontal arm like a slender gallows. From this was suspended a cord at whose end swung a tiny object that whirled and glittered in the sun.

The judge explained. "On the end of the cord is a silver ring, at which the knights tilt with lances. Twelve rings are used. The pole-points are made to fit them, and the knight who carries off the greatest number of the twelve is the victor. The whole thing is a custom as ancient as Virginia—and, of course, of the old jousting of the feudal ages. The ring is supposed to represent the device on the boss of the shield, at which the lance-point was aimed."

"How interesting!" exclaimed Kathrine, and turning, swept the stand with her longnette. "I suppose all the country's F. F. V's are here," she said triumphantly to Nancy Chalmers. "I've often wondered, by the way, what becomes of the Second Families of Virginia."

"Oh, they're mostly emigrated North," answered Nancy. "The ones that are left are all seedy. There are families here that don't admit they ever became all."

Silas Fargo shook his stooped shoulders with laughter. "Up North," he said genially, "we've got realtor factories that turn out ready-made family trees for anybody who wants to root in one."

And now over the fluttering stand and the crowd about the barriers a stir was discernible. Kathrine looked again at the field. "Who is that opened old man giving directions? The one who looks like a lion. He's coming this way, now."

"That's Major Montague Bristow," said the judge. "He's been master of the heralds for years. The tournament could hardly happen without the major."

"I'm sure I'd like him," she answered. "What a lovely girl he is talking to!"

A tall girl in shirley who had beckoned the major from the lists. She was leaning over the railing. "Major Montague Pendleton Bell!" she called in a low voice. "Isn't he one of the knights?"

"He was. But he's ill. He wasn't feeling up to it, when he came, but he didn't give up till half an hour ago. We've had to get along with seven knights."

She made an exclamation of dismay. "Poor Ricky! And what a pity! There have never been less than the full number. It will spoil the royal quadrille tonight, too. Why doesn't the committee choose some one in his place? Listen. Why not ask Mr. Valiant? He is our host tonight. I'm sure he'd be glad to help out, even without the costume."

"Egad!" he said, pulling his lip petal. "None of us had thought of him. He could ride Pendleton's mount, of course." He rubbed a moment. I'll do it. It's exactly the right thing. You're a clever girl, Shirley."

He hastily crossed the field, while the tossed back, her eyes on the fascinated figure—long since recognized—under the purple pavilion. She saw the committee put their heads together and hurriedly enter.

In the moment's wait, Shirley's eyes flowed over the two strangers whom the doctor had observed an hour before as they whirled past the Mercy's hotel, Miss Sackville on the judge's grays. Silas Fargo might have passed in his gathering for the unobtrusive city man. Kathrine was noticeable anywhere, and today he left willowy figures in the champagne-color lingerie gown and hat trimmed with bronze and gold tints, setting in relief her ivory statuesque face, drew a wave of whispered comment which left a brilliant wake behind him. Charming Little Lad Who Lives In Germany.

YOUNGEST PRINCE OF HESSE.

Children of the Landgrave of Hesse Noted For Good Looks—Games and Riddles For Little People—The Barnyard Ladies.

Not long ago a newspaper in Germany conceived the idea of printing the pictures of the children of the many royal families of that empire and asking its readers to decide by a voting contest which were the prettiest. After the votes were all in and counted it was found that the children of the landgrave of Hesse had received the

The eldest prince, Georg, is six years old, and a brother not yet three. His other brother, Philip, is one year older. If they are all as pretty as Frederica they are a handsome lot, but all can be happy in charms do not live in Germany. We have a great many on this side of the water.

The Blue Grotto.

The Blue grotto is a famous cave on the island of Capri, about 30 miles, 1½ miles long, 100 wide and 40 high and is reached from the sea by a narrow arch in the limestone cliffs. The water within reservoirs, according to one spectator, "liquid sapphire" and glitters with a pale blue light.

The general blue tone of the place is said to be caused by the refraction of the sun's rays in passing through the water in the cave. The opening to the grotto is so exceedingly small that the light that enters must first pass through the water.

A step of at least twenty minutes is necessary to accustom oneself to the light in the Blue grotto.

A Generous Dog.

A clergyman had a favorite Newfoundland dog, which was offered to him about the house. He had also a spaniel dog, which was usually kept chained up in a stable. The Newfoundland grudged his food in the house and was well fed. He seemed to think that the dog in the stable was had quite enough to eat, and he would frequently take a large bone, jump over the gate which divided the yard of the house from the stable yard and carry the bone to his companion.

WHERE SIGNS ARE AS GOOD AS BONDS

By Robert H. Moulton

WHAT undoubtedly is the most unique slide language employed anywhere in the world is to be found in Chicago. It is different from other slide languages in that it is called into use only between the hours of 9:30 a. m. and 1 p. m. each week day, because of the fact that before and after these periods it does depend upon ordinary methods of speech for communication.

But perhaps the most remarkable feature of this sign language lies in the fact that its characters which only since its number are rich of such far-reaching importance that thousands of dollars are involved practically every time one of them is made.

This extraordinary system of communication is the means by which brokers on the Chicago board of trade conduct their business of buying and selling on the open market. It is peculiar to this institution, being unlike that used on the floor of any other exchange in the world.

To the casual visitor watching the crowds congested about the pits, the flashing the fingers of a flurry in prices the signs used by the traders have no intelligible meaning, but to the experienced trader a simple movement of the hand attracts attention and at the same time conveys all the information necessary to consummate a deal.

This sign language has developed with the growth of the board and its use has long since become a necessity. The turmoil and hurly-burly resulting from a thousand traders seeking to attract attention in the excitement of the hour, added to the clink of hundreds of high-speed telegraph instruments and the noise of a small army of messengers and runners everywhere, should make articulate speech practically impossible. Thus, too, the eye is quicker than the ear, and the signals given with the hand or by a gesture of the head mean as much as a telegram to the party addressed and frequently permits the closing of a trade, when, if time had been taken as an attempt to reach the side of the party making an offer, some chance might have taken place in the market and the opportune moment would have been lost.

The sign manual of the pit trader is simplicity itself and with a very little practice anyone can become adept at it, although, of course, this does not mean that it will prefer him as a master in the strategy and generalship demanded of a good broker. For instance, wheat having sold at 90 cents, a trader catches the eye of some one opposite in the pit who has the ability to read and partly by telepathy and partly by a motion of the clenched first, signals that he will take the "offer" at 90. The seller in reply, holds up his right hand with the index finger extended horizontally, indicating that he will not more than the price quoted, or 90½ cents. The buyer motions acceptance and signals back "No." The seller and buyer then note on their cards "Sold to 'X' at Jones" and "Pur 90 at 90½," respectively, and the number of bushels bought and sold always meaning so many thousands. After trading the pit the two traders meet and check the operations.

All prices are indicated by the hand and fingers when held in a horizontal position. The clenched fist means the price is even cents. Each outstretched finger, the fingers being spread apart, represents an added eighth of a cent up to fourths; the extended hand with all of the fingers pressed together means three-quarters and the thumb only signals seven-eighths. The hand displayed vertically refers to quantities, each extended finger meaning 5,000 bushels up to 25,000 for the entire hand. Whether the grain is being offered or bid for is shown by a slight motion of the hand to or from the trader making the signal. The official reporter stationed in each pit uses all this signaling, and partly by observation and partly on information given him by the traders, notes the latest price and gives it to a telegraph operator at his side to be "put on the ticker." Thus the price of grain is made every moment of the session and transmitted to all the markets of the world.

While the visitor who sits in the gallery overlooking the floor, and who understands nothing of what is going on below he thinks to be impressed with the thought that he is looking at the vitals of a lunatic asylum, there is really no other business so well organized that one man will accept a nod and a shake of the finger for thousands of dollars without argument. This means that a verbal contract concluded in Chicago, by one trader, either written or not, is more binding than the contracts to which a member of the association is a party. No informality, no absence of legal technicalities, will avail under the rules of the association to shelve a man from unfavorable compliance with every term and every feature of his business obligation. Every protest for the enforcement of such obligation is brushed aside by a jury, not of a court, but of business men, his peers, and is not permitted to observe the spirit and intent of his promises, or to release him from his responsibility to his business to such a chant. When it is considered that in a single year more than 500,000,000 bushels of grain have changed hands, the magnitude of the business of the system employed is apparent.

The system of receiving and selling for future delivery, as applied to grain especially, and as practiced upon and adopted by the rules of the grain exchanges located in our great primary markets, is much discussed and regarding which there is more or less misunderstanding. It was devised solely in the interest of the farmer and interior grain buyer. It provides for the economical marketing of the chief grain crops of the West, and creates and maintains a broad, active and constant market for the sale of grain and provisions, independent of an immediate actual, existing consumptive demand. What is more important to the agriculturist, it provides him with ready money, which in turn finds its way through the country stores to wholesale merchants in great centers of trade, and, more than any other measure, keeps the conditioned machinery of business in harmonious activity. It also has the effect of bringing to the knowledge of the grain dealer and the farmer all needed facts necessary for them to know, in order to arrive at the relative value of their grain, as measured by the supply and demand of the world over and the world's requirements in operation, all information concerning the movement of grain, and of the markets of the world, is placed at the service of the public.

In the arena of speculation every buyer and every seller is a free lance. If the "bull" thinks the "bear" has pulled down the price of next May's wheat below the intrinsic worth of that article, the "bull" puts his neck and horns under the quotations and hoists them upward. They stand there to change the figure, like two game cocks. There can never be a quarrel between these two opposing interests. But between these two self interests equilibrium is established.

Unfortunately, the public does not fit in so nicely with the methods of the bucketshop better than it does the legitimate market. Bucketshops indulge in outward appearance are exactly the same as the offices of a legitimate commission house, with the exception of the bucketshops do not trade in grain at all. They simply bet with their customers on the fluctuations in the market, back or against the fluctuations in the market.

The real bucketshop will provide a member of a regular authorized grain exchange wants his customers to make money, and if it is in its power they make money. If they don't he knows that he will lose their trade because their commission is not to be made.

It is interesting to trace the handling of a car of grain from start until it is delivered into the elevator. First, it is necessary to provide for the protection of those from thieves after the grain has been consigned to the Chicago stockyards, as a rule, are located in remote parts of the city, and this protection comes together with the fact that they attract to their neighborhood numbers of petty pilferers seeking their petit necessary. For this reason the Chicago board of trade maintains a detective service. Upon arrival, under the protection mentioned, the first official handling of the contents of a car of grain occurs when it reaches the Chicago inspection yards of any given railroad, whereupon the weighing of the grain is witnessed by a grain inspection department, to permit inspection and sampling by the state inspectors and the receivers of the grain. The cars are then sealed and ordered to the various unloading points, such as the Chicago terminal elevators, transfer houses, mills, and some large wholesale houses, which are operated under the supervision of the board of trade weighing department, which has authorized each of these points one or more men to look after such work.

Each car, when unloaded, is thoroughly cleaned out and swept with a broom, in order that all grain may be accounted for.

WASHING GRAVEL FOR GOLD

Most Primitive of Methods Employed is By Use of Running Water and Gravity.

Placer or hydraulic mining is the art of separating gold from gravel, sand, or clay, making use principally of running water and gravity. The deposits which are susceptible to treatment of this sort have been formed by the breaking down and scattering in gold-bearing rocks and their subsequent settling by water. The disintegration may have been accomplished by any one of several agencies, or a combination of two or more of them. The rocks may have been broken and ground up by glacial action, piled in the valleys of the sides of mountains and hills as the ruins, and subsequently distributed by the action of streams or rivers.

Having then, the particles of metal gold distributed through a mass of gravel, sand, and clay, but not attached to any of it, the problem of how to recover it economically, is the most primitive appliance known is the miner's pan. In this the gold and rock are separated by careful washing, but the pan only holds fifteen to thirty pounds of gravel, and a man could not wash more than one cubic yard in a day, so that the gravel would have to contain $5 worth of recoverable gold per cubic yard to make it pay. Various hand devices have been used for gravel washing, more than the rocker and long tom, both of which separate the gold by alternate shaking and washing, the heavier gravel by running water in the bottom, while the lighter material is washed over and out of the device. Each of these devices has its peculiarities, and is adapted to certain conditions, but all are simple in construction and operation, all information concerning the movement of grain, and of the markets of the world, is placed at the service of the public.

PROPOSAL SHE LAUGHED AT.

Gather ye rosebuds while ye may,
Old Time is still a-flying;
And this same flower that smiles today
Tomorrow will be dying.
Then be not coy, but use your time,
And while you have it, use it;
For having lost but once your prime,
You may forever lose it.

While a girl is in her teens love is a fair game. When would-be wooers flock about her, she thinks their homage is due her. She is not serious, and regards all that is said to her in the same light vein. She laughs in the face of the hopeful young man who struggles with words to try to make her understand his admiration for her. She is amused at the two who are almost at swords' points, vying with each other for her favor. The man of experience treats a merry dance. As for the older man, she laughs in his face, wondering at his infatuation. She thinks June could ever wish to be linked to November. The poets sing of how May takes no heed of time; nor does it cause her a regret when she leaves sixty behind. She believes the loss of one is the gaining of two and the choice of half a dozen.

As the years rush onward, she finds that five years have made quite a difference in her life. The men of the younger set fight shy of her, casting their eyes at Miss June. The man of thirty is no longer at her beck and call. She has to invent pretty devices to keep him at her side. She no longer laughs or teases him when she finds him in a serious mood, but encourages it.

She sees an opportunity to the fact, at last, as to why she is single. Her own levity has discouraged each and every one. There is a time for mirth; there is a time also for earnestness, especially if the man who seems to test upon proposing is agreeable to the girl, are more of others lavish in her heart the thought that he is a little dearer to her than any of her friends.

Women should not play the part of a coquette too long. The law of nature may laugh heartily when he speaks to her of love, for her heart is sleeping. She knows nothing of the grand passion. The young woman or girl who trifles with the hopes of women's hopes with one fell blow. Her chances of matrimony are narrowing down to one man, and that man is who who have faulty husbands should make the best of these.

STANDING BY HER SWEETHEART.

There is a grief that wastes the heart,
Like mildew on a turnip root,
When none believes but to depart
Lodge his sadness, but keep his sighs.

When a young man falls in love, he ought to be sure that the girl is as sweet, fickle as she can be. How is he to gain this knowledge? There are a score or so of ifs and and ifs and buts which he might follow, but one or two would do. If she is a merry, happy-go-lucky damsel, always eager to go hither and thither, where he must accompany her, and has a liking for all the new fads of the hour, I'm may be certain that her own pleasure comes first with her; that he is only necessary as long as he can contribute to her delights. Let misfortune come to him, in the way of unexpectedly losing his position, and he will find a sweet heart of this kind will turn a cold shoulder to him. His companionable will be irksome to her.

If she has dreams of wedding bliss, she will not be anxious to be always on the go with him to places where it will cost money. She will study his interest without letting him realize it. If chance of fortune comes to him he will find her true. Though all of her friends grow cool toward him and turn their looks another way, she will comfort and cheer him, keep up his courage and urge him not to lose heart in his battle with the world. She will prove her love by wedding him though he is down and out, putting her shoulder to the wheel to earn support, in factory or shop, until his sky brightens and he secures another position.

Men shape their lives according to the women they love.

He who loves unwisely must pay for misplaced affection in heart-bitter sorrow. No wonder knotholes who love a young man appear to be overanxious to have him get the right kind of a sweetheart. So much depends on it in future courts, in time cases out of ten, show wives who were once happy, but flighty, sweethearts, who for a trifling cause, drove their hearts apart.

It is often a man's own fault, if his heart is caught in a vain coquette's trap. The young man who has his eyes free to see, cooling his ardor by the sweat of his brow, should call a halt when he sees the coquette. Let the girl he hesitate to care for is extravagant, would have him spend his best gains for her. Feigning poverty is a good test of some girl's affections.

ONE-TIME FRIENDS.

Remember that the friendship
Which you have lost in joy and pain
Was valuable in hope and patience
Till you sold it in a day.

Take heed of a speedy, professing friend; friendship is never lasting which flames before it burns, says a poet. Another warns: "Nothing is more dangerous than an impudent friend, or more easy prove a curse, but a pretended friend is worse." By all of this wisdom we should gather that the choosing of a true friend is to most women almost as serious a matter as choosing a lover. Are not both supposed to be cherished a lifetime?

There are women, remarkably assured of their power in all else, who make a most unwise selection of women friends. The sedate woman fairly adores the bright creature, all life and sparkle—the butterfly—she sees only the bright side of every situation and upon whose lips there is ever ready laughter, seeks the companionship of the quiet, pensive girl, whose whole counsel saves her from many a girlish blunder. Women like friends who are counsel to them. The woman who imagines that she has domestic trouble turns to the woman who sympathizes with her.

Another wife who is slaving and working from morning till night to keep down frantic expenses finds comfort with the friend who praises her for her self sacrifice. She assures her that her husband ought to be more appreciative of what she is doing for his sake; that it is a wife's duty to be frugal and help her husband accumulate a competency. She attentes to this fulsome praise with similar commonplace sympathy for the wife who is so lavish in dealing it out is the most extravagant of womankind. Her husband knows she has placed her husband on the verge of bankruptcy. A woman friend of opposite nature, different ideas, is ballast for her, and she knows it. Her husband, she helps her to be strong and brave, wise, if she incarnates herself into her companionship, and by betraying her gaining such an influence over her that she can bend her to her will against her better judgment and to the detriment of her family and loved ones. From childhood up, a woman's friendship should be safeguarded most carefully. She should be removed from influences that are likely to prove dangerous. There is an old adage that a woman friend may brew in a household if she's inclined to be a mischief maker.

Great Educator's Advice.

Children should not leave school without knowing what good books are, and without having their imagination, which is the great power of the mind, fed with the food by awakened and directed as to insure at least a healthy growth. Let their minds be broader than the education that is limited to their business expenses, and tending to govern conduct on general principals rather than on principles of business.

Possibly Reason the Training.

"The trouble about husbands," remarked to a friend, "is that after you get them thoroughly trained to shut all the windows when it rains, and feed the cat and look after the rubber plant they go on sleeping and discovering that they cost a gloom over the household."

Emotions Disturb Digestion.

Worry and pinaves, rage and exitement, fear and anger cause the muscles of the stomach and the rest of the alimentary channel to stop action. These emotions also stop the juices of digestion from flowing.

Children's clothes should be fresh and sweet—this means a big wash—never mind—use RUB-NO-MORE CARBO NAPTHA SOAP. Washday then has no terrors. No rubbing. No worry—clothes clean—germs killed—mother happy.

RUB-NO-MORE CARBO NAPTHA SOAP used on your linens and cloth means a clean, healthy, happy, germless home—it does not need hot water.

ERUPTION DISFIGURED FACE

Lock Box 35, Maurice, Ia.—"In the spring of 1911 our little daughter, age five years, had a breaking out on her lip and part of her cheek that we took for ringworm. It resembled a large ringworm, only it differed in that it was covered with watery blisters that itched and burned terribly, made worse by her scratching it. Then the blisters would break through and let out a watery substance. She was very cross and fretful while she had it and had very little rest at night. When the eruption was at its worst the teacher of the school sent her home and would not allow her to attend until the disfigurement of her face was gone.

"I wrote and received a sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment, which we used according to directions, and they gave instant relief, so we bought some more. It gradually grew better. We kept on using Cuticura Soap and Ointment and in three or four months the child was entirely cured." (Signed) Mr. Henry Prins, Oct. 30, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address postcard "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

MILK AS A TISSUE-FORMING FOOD.

Few people realize how much nourishment there is in milk, particularly how much tissue-forming material there is in it. They realize that it is rich in fat because they see cream rise upon it and know that it is made into butter, but of the fact that it is an important tissue former they often lose sight. It happens that by far the greater part of the tissue forming materials remain in the milk after it is skimmed or after the butter is removed from it, so for the purpose of building up the body skim milk counts for as much as an equal volume of whole milk and buttermilk is not far behind.

"Do you believe, dear, that we should work for our husbands?"

"You bet I do!" the second girl answered. "You just bet I do!"

"I mean after we're married," said the first girl.

"Oh," said the other "after we're married, certainly not!"—

SEASONING FOR COTTAGE CHEESE, SOUPS AND SALADS.

The savories of the diet, the highly flavored substances, like herbs and spices, which we use in small amounts only, seldom have much food value, but they are often the means of making the inexpensive food materials attractive and thus they may serve to keep down the cost of living. Americans are not much given to the use of these substances and might well take a lesson from some of the European nations. There is a vegetable of European origin, belonging like the onion, to the lily family and known as the chive, which has so good a flavor and is so easy to raise and to use, and is besides so ornamental as it grows, that it seems strange that American housekeepers do not make more use of it. The chive is a perennial which puts forth long, slender, hollow leaves and has small delicate purplish flowers. It can not easily be grown from the seed, but a bunch of chives can be separated and the parts replanted. They make an ornamental border for a flower or vegetable bed and can be grown in a pot or window box in the house. Some people put them into their fern dishes and consider them very decorative.

The advantage of using the chive, which resembles but is not exactly like the onion in taste and odor, besides the fact that it gives variety to the diet, is that it can be obtained in small quantities and used without cutting the garden of getting any of it in the hands. The leaves can be cut off and snipped into small pieces by means of a pair of scissors, and unless the hands touch the cut surfaces (and this is avoidable), no trace of the odor remains upon them. It will be seen the juice of the plant are close, a piece of dish can be left under them and the leaves snipped directly on to it in preparation for use. The cutting of the leaves does not injure the plant in any way; it seems rather to stimulate its growth and to make it more vigorous and thrifty.

The uses of the chive as a flavoring material are as numerous as those of the more familiar member of the same family—the onion; wherever chopped onion is used chopped chives may be substituted. A few special uses may, however, be mentioned. In cottage cheese chopped condition it is an attractive addition to cottage cheese. (See Farmers' Bulletin 587, Cheese and its Economical Use in the Diet, and Farmers' Bulletin 412, The Care of Milk and Its Use in the Home); or other soft cream cheese and such mixtures may be used as sandwich fillings. It can be added to omelets, and to milk toasts and soups. As an addition to plain lettuce salad it has almost no equal. Chives are used in the seasoning, of course, upon the favor with which onion like seasonings are held in mind.

Still another advantage may be mentioned. The chive's green in color and offers a pleasing contrast to the white of milk sauce or cottage cheese or to the yellow of salad dressing, thus attracting the eye as well as the palate.

A Ballad of Vegetables.

(Philadelphia Record.)

A potato went out on a mash,
And sought an onion bed.
"That's pit for me," observed the sunsash
And all the beets turned red.
"Go way," the onion wearily cried;
"Your love I cannot be."
The pumpkin he pour lovelyl bride—
"You cantaloupe with me."

But onward still the tuber came,
And lay down at her feet;
"Oh, my!" the onion wearily cried;
"Your love I cannot be."
"I do not carrot at all to wed,
So go, sir, if you please."
The modest onion meekly said,
"Leeks and cabbages are easy."
"Go, think that you have never seen Brussels sprouts in your eye."
"Ah, pare a poor little tuber prayed;
"My cherryished bride you'll be;
You are the only weeping maid
Who's ever spoken for me."
And as the silly tuber spoke,
Tears filled her by surprise,
And giving her an artichoke,
Devoured her with his eyes.

Scotch Bard's Remarkable Eyes.

Burns's eyes were remarkable for the fire he was his large dark eye. It was, we are told by one writer "full of mind and literally glowed when he spoke with emotion or interest." Sir Walter Scott, who was a child when he lived in Edinburgh, says: "I never saw another eye to him. A noble head, and I have seen the most distinguished men of my time."

Removing Paint.

To remove paint from chairs and other painted articles, mix thoroughly equal parts of common baking soda and slaked lime. Moisten with water to the consistency of paint and apply, allowing to remain for several minutes. Wash off, and the paint will come with it. It is advisable to allow preparation to remain on a little longer.—Good Housekeeping Magazine.

Convenient.

Estate Agent (exhibiting property to prospective tenants)—And then this house is so conveniently laid out. Not the slightest need of equipping it with a greenhouse, and yet all the time a train passes every five minutes on the railroad not 20 feet away.

Exchange.

"Does your son take after you?"

"No. I'm afraid we're a little at odds on our ideas. He wears a high hat and evening clothes, while I have a fancy for going hunting and looking after a boy scout."

What the Bride Went Away In

A GEM or a dress is shown here, in this copy of a French model by one of the premier of that fine designers who have vindicated the art and prerogative of Paris. This three-piece dress, made by Kurzman for Miss Wilson, makes almost no departure from the original design which inspired it.

Corbeau, or raven's bill blue, which is so dark as to be near black, and so clear that it is a fascinating shade, is the color. It seems to be suited to the materials used, which were gabardine and charmeuse.

The bodice is made of dark blue chiffon over white. Over the shoulders are braided strips of gabardine, and the bill is made of gabardine covered with 13 rows of narrow silk braid. The bodice opens over vestee and collar of white organdy edged with a rose and green-flowered ribbon border, fastened in front by three ribbon buttons. The sleeves are long and made over white chiffon, ending in a wide cuff of 16 rows of narrow black braid.

The short skirt is made of gabardine and has three circular flounces starting at the sides. These are fastened at the back with a strap of gabardine, attached to which are four small bands of braid. The flounces are attached to corbeau charmeuse and about one inch of this shows between them. The flounces and the bottom of the skirt are edged with black silk braid.

The coat is a combination of the gabardine and charmeuse. The front is of the charmeuse, which extends over the shoulders and upper part of the back. It is gathered in at the collar.

Carrying out the idea of combining the two materials, the three-quarter sleeves of gabardine are topped with charmeuse. The edges are bound with flat silk braid. There is a soft girdle of gabardine ending in front with an oval charmeuse buckle.

This quiet-looking but really stylish costume is of that fashionable type which has replaced the more severely tailor-made. It is a gown that presupposes many things in the way of luxurious traveling and may be taken as a model of an afternoon or visiting gown of cloth which will answer many requirements.

Casque and French Twist Coiffures

THERE is such an unskilled state of affairs in the matter of styles for the coiffures that no particular manner of dressing the hair may be said to be "the fashion," but one may, with greater frequency than any others, see styles, some of them very old, one is the "French twist." In the latter the hair is usually placed high on the head.

In the group of coiffures pictured are two modifications of the casque coiffure and one of the French twist are fashion's portrayal. It is considerable that the side parting is adopted in all of them, and that two of the three are waved and the third is absolutely plain.

When the hair is fairly abundant the unwaved coiffure is liked for those who are given to dancing the modern and somewhat frolicsome dances. It is easier to keep the coiffure in order, of course, when the hair is unwaved than with the adoption of a more fluffy style. The hair is brushed up from the nape of the neck to the top of the head. This lengthwise coil is pinned down with out pulling the hair tightly back, so that it leaves it soft about the face. The ends are arranged on top of the head in puffs or coils, or if the hair is short, they may be curled and pinned down in a mass of pretty curls.

In the Casque coiffure the hair, either waved or straight, and parted or not parted, is arranged like a cap or bonnet, and with the ends turned under and pinned in so that they are just right of. The style therefore, is difficult for anyone with long hair.

When the hair is parted on one side for this coiffure the ends are brought to the opposite side, tucked under and pinned in place. The usual fashion, at the time where the pinning is done, is to place a long stick or a Spanish comb. The Spanish comb used with the French twist is quite the latest and smartest item in hair-dressing style.

Lingerie Shoulder Scarf.

One of the new dainty things is the embroidered lingerie shoulder scarf.

To begin with it is a thing of exquisite dainty and attractive.

It is usually made of soft net it is often scalloped about the edge, with white or colored cotton. Often it is almost covered with embroidery.

Sometimes, the medallions of colored have arrived embroidered bottom-hole or the scarf to fone various designs. One especially attractive scarf shows white cotton and net, the medallions of soft old blue, buttonhole in blue white cotton. Some of the medallions are crescent shaped, some are circles and some are irregular shapes of other sorts.

SEEK OOD CORNERS

British Club Members Have Peculiar Idea of Cruises.

Idea is to Visit the Most Unfrequented Places on the Earth and Spread information on Their Return to Civilization.

Love of the sea and the spirit of adventure led a number of gentlemen—surgeons, barristers, bankers, city men and others of independent means—to join together a few years ago and found a yachting club distinct from all others. Their object, says a writer in London Tid Bits, was not to race, but to explore the nooks and corners of home and foreign coasts, adding to our marine knowledge, to issue new charts and encourage cruising among enthusiasts. Cups are offered annually for meritorious cruising work, the logs of the winners being printed in the club's yearly journal, which is issued for private circulation only.

The public has little of the doings of the Royal Cruising club, as it is now termed, for it is one of the most exclusive clubs in the country and a couple of hundred yachting enthusiasts are usually awaiting admission as members.

One of the leading members of the club is Mr. Justice Channell, who can sail a small boat with the best. His expert knowledge may be gathered from the fact that to him falls the task of awarding each year the challenge cups already referred to. And Mr. Justice Channell's report of his award, which was together over 100 yachts and boats.

Many of them are doubtless inspired by the feats of yachtsmen of years ago—Mr. Sidney Hart, for instance, who, in 1864, took out a 35-ton yacht to Sydney, making a voyage of 16,000 miles in 130 days, and the feat of Capt. Wylie, who took a 33-ton yacht named Spray from Cowes to Hobart Town, Australia.

Proportion to this, a still smaller craft of only 22 tons, the Teaser had made voyages out to the West Indies and back, and the performance of cutter a little best Pre of only eight tons, which went out on a cruise to the Baltic and back, may be commended among the records of long cruises and passages undertaken by quite small sailing craft, as proving that size is by no means necessary for safety, though very essential to comfort, in deep sea sailing.

No More.

Mrs. Nelson O'Shaughnessy's daring presence at the wedding of Hiertas Jou is only another proof of a brave woman's pluck.

Mrs. O'Shaughnessy, at the Connor club in New York, derided one day the idea that woman was weak, or cowardly, or that she need ever play a limited part in the world's affairs.

"Well," said a lady of the old school, "I know one thing woman can't do. She can't reform a man after marriage."

"No?" Mrs. O'Shaughnessy said. "No? And yet I know many a married man who in his bachelor days smoked Secret cigars."

Life may be a bore even to the man who isn't one himself.

It was the same yacht that the owner, Mr. Erskine Childers, made a cruise of 1,000 miles out to and in the Baltic. Chatting about Mr. Childers' voyage, the editor of the Yachtsman remarked to the writer that it was one of the most remarkable voyages of its kind in recent years. As he pointed out, Asgard was not fitted with a motor, and without the constant application of narrow, rocky channels must have been extremely difficult.

The Journals of the club tell of many other venturesome voyages by these amateur yachtsmen—trips across the Bay of Biscay in terrible weather and single-handed voyages in Swedish cutters in the Baltic, successfully carried out by members of the Royal Cruising club, who own altogether over 100 yachts and boats.

Many of them are doubtless inspired by the feats of yachtsmen of years ago—Mr. Sidney Hart, for instance, who, in 1864, took out a 35-ton yacht to Sydney, making a voyage of 16,000 miles in 130 days, and the feat of Capt. MONARCH'S ACT SURPRISES

Old Lady Thought It Undignified That British Monarch Should Blow His Own Nose.

When King George of Great Britain came to the throne there were wild rumors that he was a little interest in horse-racing that the turf would suffer. This year, however, his majesty has attended a number of the big race meetings.

One recalls the story told of an earlier royal visit to Doncaster. An old Yorkshire woman had gone on the course for the sole purpose of seeing royalty, and she called out excitedly: "Which is the king? Which is the king?"

"There he is," said some one near. "That's him with the handkerchief in his hand."

"Ah!" gasped the old lady, a touch of reverence in her voice.

Just then his majesty, who had a cold in the head, performed a commonplace little operation.

"Goodness me!" the old lady exclaimed aghast. "He—he blows his own nose!"

Mistaken in the Portrait.

Menzel, the German artist, was a regular patron of a certain Berlin wine shop. One day a man and wife came in and sat down at his table and presently Menzel noticed that the woman was making fun of him.

Calmly he drew out his sketching book, gazed at the woman awhile, as if to study her face for a portrait, and then commenced to draw. Her husband immediately took notice: "I forbid you to draw a picture of my wife. Stop it!" he exclaimed, angrily.

Menzel made a few finishing touches and then passing the sketching book over to the husband, he inquired, with a laugh, "Is that your wife?" He had drawn a goose.—Youth's Companion.

Married Men Outlive Bachelors.

The latest statistics issued by the city of Berlin show, among other things, that married men there live considerably longer on the average than bachelors. The percentages of married men who survive, on the other hand, is greater than among spinsters, owing principally to mortality attending childbirth.—New York Times.

China in 1912 exported $2,573,379 worth of peanuts.

Post Toasties

For That Bedtime Snack

The kiddies need something that is dainty and appetizing, don't they? And you want to be sure that they have a food that is easily digested—one that will not disturb their sleep.

Post Toasties are surprisingly good at any time.

They are made of the hearts of the finest Indian corn, perfectly cooked, delicately sweetened and salted, rolled into thin, ribbony flakes and toasted to a crisp, golden brown.

They have that indescribable flavour—sweet and delicious, that so delights the taste.

Just pour from the package and add cream and sugar, or sprinkle over fresh berries or fruit.

Easy to serve and mighty good.

The outlook for a good apple crop for the current year is encouraging. Last year a carload of western Michigan apples was shipped to Manchester, Eng., and sold for a good price. The Ludington Chamber of Commerce and the Michigan Development Bureau, and the press secured was good. The development bureau is now planning upon inspecting a much larger number of apples, that they may get ready and is planning upon having its label put upon all apples that will come up to the high standard determined upon. The "Sunsprytze" label will be used upon these apples and will be a guarantee of quality, which will insure higher prices than what are paid for common stuff. Already the bureau has received requests for the inspection service and as the weeks go by, it is believed that apples of the better grades in the western Michigan country will prior to have their apples inspected by the bureau inspector, prior.

BUSINESS MEN AID BETHLEHEM BOOM.

Industrial Commission of Pennsylvania Town Secures Houses For Workmen.

In its comparatively short life of seven years the industrial commission of Pennsylvania has done some wonderful things for this town on the north bank of the Lehigh river. In its annual report Malcolm Morgan, the president of this body of business men, recounts some of these achievements.

One of the first problems was to get the capitalists interested in a building boom, and the commission started in organizing the United Realty company. In the last seven years hundreds of homes for workmen have been built, and this town may be said to be still in its infancy, for within the next year or two a community to the east of this town will be opened on which 20,000 more homes can and will be built.

Perhaps the biggest project of the industrial commission, which had the aid of the South Bethlehem Commercial league in the matter, was the projecting of summons that two new bridges across the Lehigh river would be built. While these have not yet been constructed, they will be within a year or two. These bridges are the Minsi Trail bridge, which will span the river to the east of the town and will cost more than $250,000, and the new $225,000 structure across the Lehigh at the foot of Main street. Contracts will be let soon.

The industrial commission has before it the task of making the creation of a municipal comfort system, the purpose of a site for an armory, which the state will build; the consolidation of North Bethlehem and its 4,000 inhabitants, the consolidation of the Bethlehems and the two contiguous boroughs of Fountain Hill and Northampton Heights and the encouraging of the establishment of more industries.

The dual to be aimed at is the extension of the municipal service in a state to such a point that municipal experts, as chiefs of the various departments in the municipal government, shall be produced by graduates under the civil service system and shall be transferred from one city to another in the state, so that they shall become part of state municipal service. This is the plan in Germany, and there they have the best municipal governments in the world.—William Howard Taft.

Old China.

The beauty of old china is often destroyed by brown spots. These are due to the surface. An effective way to remove these is to bury the dish in the earth, covering it completely. The darker spots require more time to remove them than the lighter ones.—Detroit Free Press.

Elephants With Human Sense

One of the big events in the Sun Brothers' performances this season, is the Superbly Trained Animal Ensemble. It is claimed for this section of the show, to be the surprise and wonder of all beholders. Here will be found llamas that are dancers, acrobats, musicians and dancers; Elephants, with the wits of human beings and with a sense of humor, these pachyderms are the sensation of every city and town visited, in fact they have appeared in all parts of Europe and the big cities of the United States, and forms in all, the most picturesque, inspiration, comical, astounding display of elephant sagacity ever conceived. There is also a bunch of wonderfully trained bears, buboons, mules, lions, camels and zebus, in fact more trained animals than ever before seen with one show.

The Sun Brothers' Shows, for this season also present many distinct European "thrillers" and novelties, including feats and features absolutely new to the American public and vastly superior to those of past seasons. The wild beast and animal display is a big affair and seems to exhibit a superb collection of the finest specimens from all parts of the jungles of Africa, India and Asia.

As usual and in vogue for nearly a quarter of a century with this show, the management is following its famous policy of allowing no gamblers, ticket scalpers, camp followers or immoral issues with the show at any time or place. Two complete performances will be given at Charlevoix at 2:00 and 8:00 o'clock p. m., on Friday, July 24.

Who Banks Your Earnings!

Somebody does. If you are letting it all slip away from you, a certain portion of it is being banked by the various people to whom you pay it.

Why not make it pay to yourself; after you work for your money, it will repay the compliment by working for you if you will but give it the opportunity.

Save a portion of your earnings; keep in mind the beginnings of the big men of business whom you see prosper to every, thinking they have a mysterious Midas touch. Almost without exception they began with no capital but a strong will and an inflexible purpose.

For instance, John D. Rockefeller began as errand boy at $1.50 a week. In six years he had banked $2000—enough to start a modest business of his own. MORAL—Bank your own money.

SCOTT TALKS BACK

Candidate For Congress Denies Allegations Made by Unscrupulous Enemies

To Editor of SENTINEL:

I am extremely sorry that a local controversy has arisen in Charlevoix in consequence of my candidacy for Congress and I am equally surprised to note that the Courier is against me as I had assurance of the editor over a month ago that he was favorable to me. Fortunately, the conversation was in the presence of a witness and there was no compensation offered or suggested to provoke his editor's support.

Regardless of the kindly assurance of the Courier I sent the editor ten dollars as payment for some small notices which I wished him to make. Incidentally the editor of the SENTINEL has at all times flatly refused to accept any compensation for anything he might or could do for me or in my behalf.

In the Charlevoix Courier of July 8th, Mr. Will E. Hampton states in large letters that I have promised the post office in Charlevoix to at least one person. I am not surprised at the statement of one who is handling the fabrication and maligning and of my opponent's campaign.

Everything that Mr. Hampton has uttered about me in the campaign so far has been absolutely false and intentionally misleading or a misstatement of my promise of the postoffice job in Charlevoix, and at the place the next Congressman from this district will not be able to name a postmaster at that place but by the President of U. S., whom as you know is a democrat, but as this might not preclude a promise to the unwary, I desire to emphatically deny that I have made any such promise to anyone or any promise and I hereby challenge Mr. Hampton to name the person whom his ingenious literary brain has conceived of being the person in question.

For the purpose of throwing some light it may be of interest to know that Mr. Hampton has been opposed to me ever since I said he became a candidate for the Senate four years ago—this may have been due to the fact that the Editor of the SENTINEL early became one of my warm personal friends. But I can see in the treatment accorded old friends for new political support seven though such conduct might give me a seat in Congress, I'd rather go to Congress with a clean record behind me and the voice of clean people.

FRANK D. SCOTT.

A VERY NARROW-MINDED JOURNALIST

So far as the saloon question is concerned the editor of the Petoskey News Progress and the editor of this paper are of one mind. When the issue is raised Northern saloons are no concern of this paper will line up for the latter proposition.

But the Progress editor has become so absorbed and impregnated with the "dam idea" that he can see nothing else. He has followed in a groove that has so steadily narrowed that he has commenced to measure mental calibers just about "pin-head" dimensions.

From the columns of the Progress we learn that Frank Scott called upon the editor last week and asked him a few questions, what we do, we confidently suppose of Frank's conduct. We are sorry Frank knows, but a man is very apt to be outspoken in his language when he is lied about, and the Progress has certainly lied about Frank Scott.

The record of Frank Scott's votes on saloon questions has been published in these columns. There is not to be found in that record one single act that can place him in sympathy with the west side of the proposition.

There is in the attitude of Editor Perry a vindictiveness that is absolutely unjustifiable. He is a party to an "unholy alliance" with a moral conscienceless conspiracy, and is but the mouth-piece of the outfit. Premising our observations upon the probable fact that the Progress is a conspicuous organ of a just cause, we single here the atrocities of Editor Perry not so that cause more harm than good, in that they overstep the bounds of rational argument, and wallow in the quagmire of calumny.

We can only judge men by their records, and Frank Scott's record will bear bear scrutiny.

THE PIKE TOUR

As these columns close the big West Michigan Pike auto tour is on, with about a mile of cars are at Traverse City, bound north. The editor of this paper, Editor Perry of Cheboygan and D. D. Paulson left Wednesday morning for Traverse City in Geo. H. Van Pelt's Cadillac, to join the procession, which arrives at Charlevoix about noon Thursday.

The pike as yet, at many points, is unfinished, but the good work is going on, and the West Michigan Pike will be largely open for use completed and tagged, K. Kreutzberg, the good work go on. It spells prosperity.

JOHN M. HARRIS IS CANDIDATE FOR SENATOR

Tells Why He is Republican Candidate and Gives His Public Record

Im asking the Republicans of the Twenty-ninth Senatorial District of Michigan for the nomination as their candidate for the State Senate.

I have been able for the past twenty eight years to give my unqualified support to the platforms of the Republican party; therefore the party platform when adopted will be my platform because I am convinced that I can best further the general welfare by supporting the consensus of the wisdom of the party as expressed in its platforms.

I am fifty-three years old.

A resident of Charlevoix county thirty-four years.

My boyhood was spent on the farm and in the mills and camps.

Taught public school in this county twelve years.

First Mayor of my home city.

Four years Prosecuting Attorney of the County.

Member of the County Board of School Examiners.

Twelve years probate Judge of the County.

President State Association Probate Judges one term.

Twenty years member of our Board of Education.

Since 1893 an active practicing lawyer.

I want to go to the Senate, and if my wish is granted me by the Electors of this District I promise all interests and committees a square deal, an active attention to all legislative matters in which the District is interested, and sincere gratitude to all for conferring on me this honor.

JOHN M. HARRIS,
Boyne City, Charlevoix County, Michigan.

AN ALPENA PRODUCT

Alpena is indeed fortunate in having one of her sons as a candidate to represent the Eleventh District of Michigan in congress. Mr. Frank D. Scott is turely an Alpena product. He was educated in the Alpena public schools and concluded his education in the University of Michigan. After graduating from the Law Department of the University of Michigan in 1901, he entered the practice of law here in Alpena, becoming one of the ablest members of the bar.

As a careful and painstaking attorney he has served his clients efficiently and faithfully and has shown that he has same conscientious care to the business of the public, having with marked success served the city of Alpena as its city attorney and the county of Alpena as prosecuting attorney.

Mr. Scott's ability was recognized, not only by this county, but by her sister counties, and he was elected to represent the Twenty-ninth Senatorial District in the State Legislature where Senator Scott became a leader. During the session of 1913, his brother senators recognizing his ability, elected him president pro tem. of the Senate, assigning various important committee work to his charge and making him chairman of the very important committee, the Judiciary Committee.

Senator Scott is of such a genial and likeable disposition that there is probably not a man better known in Michigan than he is and one need but to meet him to be his friend. The people of the Eleventh District of Michigan may well feel proud of being represented in Washington by a man possessing Senator Scott's ability and we feel sure that he will discharge these new duties as faithfully and efficiently as he has done so many times in the past.—Alpena Echo.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT PLANT

Indian Workman at Rock Product Crusher Killed Wednesday—Body Terribly Mutilated

While this paper was being printed last Wednesday afternoon a fatal accident occurred at the Rock Product Co. plant, in which Jasper Mickasong, an Indian, lost his life in a horrible manner.

Just how the accident occurred will never be known. In some way the man got under the elevator of the big stone-crusher, and his body was found almost completely severed at the breast. He was also decapitated.

The man was married, and had one son, eighteen years of age. This is the first bad accident that has occurred at the plant.

OSBORN'S STRENGTH GROWS

In the National Guard moving pictures shown here last Thursday night, Gov. Osborn is shown in his passage from city to camp, escorted by a regiment of infantry and a troop of cavalry. The writer of this rode with the brigade staff in the second "set of fours" behind the governor.

The writer cannot do it again, but others will, at Grayling in 1915. The camp says the Charlevoix auto never let go to the scrap heap soon, but he will go at Grayling to see Osborn received with military honors.

From all quarters of the State come reports of a wave of popular sentiment in the direction of Osborn. The people know him, they know he is square with them, and they know he is the best equipped man in the State for chief executive.

Osborn will be the next governor.

POLITICS ASIDE

There is no man with a soul who does not deeply sympathize with our governor, in the sorrow that is impending for him and his household. Mrs. Ferris is very critically ill, and cannot survive long. She has begged him not to be a candidate for re-nomination, because she wants him with her.

The tender affection of Gov. Ferris for his stricken wife appeals to the heart of every citizen of Michigan, and politics is relegated to the rear, with the sincere hope that the loyal, affectionate companion of the governor may yet live and continue to bless the household of which Governor Ferris is the honored and beloved head.

Politics aside!

HERMAN L. SWIFT DIES

Friends Blame Imprisonment of Ex-Head of Beulah Home

Detroit Journal:

Herman L. Swift, long secretary and general manager of the Beulah Home for Boys at Boyne City, Mich., died at his residence, 179 Selden avenue, on Monday, after a short illness. His friends feel that his death was the sequel of his imprisonment at Ionia on the charge of abusing the boys entrusted to his care.

Mr. Swift spent his life in the care of boys. The inception of his work was the picking up of a little lad on the streets of Chicago. The establishment on the Leona home at Jackson was the next step; the Beulah home at Boyne City was the larger development, until the arrest of Swift and his later commitment to Ionia brought the project to an end. He leaves a widow and two-year-old son.

HONOR THE GOVERNOR

The governor of Michigan will be in Charlevoix today with the "Pike" tourists.

Honor the governor.

He is worthy of every courtesy, and partisanship should be put aside.

Michigan never had a governor who personally merited greater respect than C. N. Ferris, and he has behaved like a man with brains and courage, and Gov. Ferris has both.

Honor the governor.

BARNES CIRCUS

AMAZINGLY GREAT

Largest and Only Genuine Wild Animal Circus in the World. 600 Educated Animals. 75 Sensational Acts and Features

"The Show That's Different," is a term given by many prominent critics to the Al G. Barnes 3-Ring Wild Animal Circus. Just why this show is different can be understood when it is known that the program presented completely upsets the conventional in circuses for the reason that the entire entertainment is given by educated animals and domestic mules.

Over 600 of these animal-actors are comprised in the Barnes troupe, the animals do everything that the human circus performer has been doing: Juggling, balancing, high jumping and diving, acrobatics, posing, dances, drills, ball playing, bare back riding, tumbling etc., are a part of the things they do. Their proficiency is a remarkable sight to witness. The Barnes circus always bears the distinction of being the only real and largest wild animal show in the world. The management has spared no of its entertainment and business conduct likewise add to the reasons of why the show is "different."

Unusual indeed are the big wild animal acts. Tom, Jerry and Brutus, horse riding African lions are a very remarkable example of wild animal training. Sampson, the aviator lion rides to the top of the tent, surrounded by shooting sky rockets. A large group of seals and sea lions do marvelous feats of jugging and bare back riding. Mlle. Florine, a specially young woman presents a troupe of ferocious spotted jaguars and pumas. Miss Mable Stark appears with a troupe of man-eating Royal Bengal and Siberian tigers. Jim Hill, the wrestling Grizzly is another sensation, also the large troupe of performing bears.

The twenty-four jungle-bred, full grown African lions shown in one act by Herr Louis Roth, comprise the greatest and most thrilling wild animal specialty ever known. Herr Roth unlike the arena alone with these great beasts and makes each one perform. The lions are first grouped into pyramids, then into piles on the floor, the daring trainer lying on the topmost one. This band is placed on the backs of a snarling beasts mouth, another cats raw meat held in the lips of the trainer. The daring of the fellow is thrilling to an extreme.

The Barnes challenge horses and ponies—500 of them—beautiful, all educated to perform, present in their act one of the very great acts of modern time entertainment. Elephants, camels, zebras, hyenas, dogs, goats, monkeys, etc. are prominently shown.

There are many laughing spots throughout the program provided by twelve six tickling clowns and fifty comedy mules, monkeys, bears, ponies, dogs and a large, fat, jolly, Santa Claus.

The new, glittering, mile-long, four-band street parade is presented to the public at 10:30. Two performances will be given here Thursday August 6th.

BIG FEATURES

Two Day Musical Festival, One of the Innovations. Instantly Kryl and His Band Soon to Start on Third Chautauqua Tour

Announcement has just been authorized of the principal features of the Redpath Chautauqua here for this season. The program is brim full of good things and not a few innovations. There will not be a dull hour from start to finish.

One of the innovations will be a two-day grand musical festival during which there will be nothing but music, aside from the literary lectures of the morning hour opened.

On one day of this festival, Marcus A. Kellerman, the great dramatic baritone, who has appeared in solo with the Dannrouch Orchestra, the Theodore Thomas Orchestra, the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra and other widely known organizations, will give a recital. Mr. Kellerman has also appeared in grand opera in Berlin and other foreign cities, but gave up a promising career in grand opera to engage in oratorio and oratorio singing.

In the evening of the same day, the Cathedral Choir will appear in one of their musical programs. The reperteirs of the Cathedral Choir includes short numbers arranged by such composers as Buck, Stainer and Schnecker, also a number of old hymns, secular solos, duets, quartets and choruses of a very high order, usually closing with a finale of an operatic nature.

On the next day of this festival, Bohumir Kryl and his world famous band will present a program in the afternoon including cornet solos by Mr. Kryl. This is the third season of Mr. Kryl and his band on the Redpath Chautauqua this year, there being a unanimous call for them everywhere.

In the evening of the same day Kryl and his Band will be heard in another concert during the first part of the program and the latter part will be given up to selections from grand opera by the Boston Grand Opera Company, accompanied by the band. These grand opera players will be a grand finale to the festival.

The opening concert will be given in three parts. One part will include vocal quartet selections, the second will include instrumental numbers on violin, cello and piano, and the third division will include the famous bell ringers.

The Kellogg-Haines Singing Party will present in special costume an evening in light opera, probably giving the entire rendition of "Lovely Galatea." This organization is one of the best known in the Lyceum and Chautauqua world today.

One of the several lecturers who will speak here Chautauqua week is to deal with the Japanese problem in this country—a subject which has been discussed much during the past year and yet one upon which people outside of California are but little informed.

Having lived in Ohio and California, Mr. Flowers has been able to study the Japanese problem from the viewpoint of both eastern and western people. Statistics show that there are over 70,000 of the 75,000 Japanese in the United States in California. In 1870 the number was only 100.

The usual emphasis will be placed throughout the program on work among the children. Each Chautauqua will have a woman play-ground worker and story teller. The play-ground work will be given to all the children.

Especial attention will be paid to the Sunday programs and their approp

FOOD VALUES.

The chemistry of cooking has a mysterious and rather terrifying sound to many women, and the mere mention of a "carbohydrate" or a "protein" will make them skip over the page or drop the book to turn to some more familiar subject. As a matter of fact, the fundamental principles of nutrition are quite simple and should be easily understood by all. Farmers Bulletin 142, which will be sent on application to the United States Department of agriculture, Washington, D. C., discusses the general principles of nutrition, as well as a number of the more practical phases of the subject, with special reference to the results obtained in the department's investigations and the closely related work of the agricultural experiment stations.

Our bodies may be likened to an engine and the food we eat to the fuel used in the engine. We all know that engines must be supplied with coal, wood, or some other fuel before they can be made to perform any work. When the fuel consumed by the citizens of the U. S. the familiar process of burning is literally applied, the energy which was stored up in all fuels—form in the fuel is changed into an entire form, giving the muscle power to furnish its output. It is always a wonderful process that enables us to accomplish these various results from the energy stored up in food.

Of the many varieties of fuel to be had, some are more energy than others. For example, coal containing a large amount of ash is not worth the cost of supplying as much heat and power as coal which is free from ash. Similarly, some foods have an advantage over others in their ability to supply the body with a maximum amount of heat and energy. Again, foods which are large grains contain large amounts of coal, while those with small grains burn small pieces to better advantage. The same principle holds true for food, a man at hard labor needing a diet quite unlike that required by a man leading a sedentary life.

Food as we buy it consists of an edible portion, which contains water and the nutrients, and of refuse, such as bones, eggshells and shells. The nutrients are classified as proteins, fats, carbohydrates and mineral matters. Protein is familiar to us in the lean and gristle of meat, the white of eggs, and the gluten of wheat, fats chiefly in the form of butter, lard, cream, oil, and the fleshy portions of meat, carbohydrates in the starchy and sweet portions of vegetables and fruits, and the mineral matters in the bones, eggshells and shells. COMMUNITY CONCERN IN BETTER HOUSING.

Plans Should Embrace Tenements and Single Family Dwellings.

Housing reform applies not only to tenements, but to the single family dwelling also, according to John Ihlder, field secretary of the National Housing association, writing in the Survey. He says:

"We have learned that bad housing may be found not only in the single family dwelling, but even in what is styled a single family residence. Just as it was found impossible to draw a valid distinction between an 'apartment house' and a 'tenement house,' so it is impossible to draw one between shack and dwelling.

"The new conception of what a city dwelling should be required to provide for its inhabitants runs counter to some established customs.

"When public health authorities, anti-tuberculosis associations, morals efficiency commissions, fire departments, life and fire insurance companies and a score of other associations, social, semi-public and private, find that their efforts to secure the minimum of improvement lead inevitably to the dwellings of the people, then the providing of those dwellings ceases to be a purely private affair and becomes in large degree a community affair.

"So our cities are coming to realize that they must take from the hands of ability of means that every dwelling place—single family dwelling or tenement—light, air, privacy and safety from fire.

"In New York city, in New Jersey, in Columbus, in Buffalo, wherever an advance in housing legislation has been made, there has been this opposition based on the fear that it would check initiative. And in every case experience has shown that instead it stimulated initiative.

"And the new buildings of higher type endured from other and expensive sites in other cities have their roots in our tenement dwellings."

ST. LOUIS OUSTS BILLBOARDS.

Nine Year Local Battle Brings Banishment For Big Signs.

The final run of the billboard tribe took place in St. Louis after a nine year court battle, when the city commissioner announced that 1,000 billboards, virtually all in the city, be torn down within four days.

The billboards were on the property of approximately 4,000 property owners, and to each of these owners a special delivery letter was sent calling their attention to the local ordinance and requiring that the boards be removed within three days of the receipt of notification, one day's grace being allowed for delivery of the order.

"I shall have an an equal right and the offending boards will come down," said building Commissioner McGuire.

The law enforcement to be enforced by the building commissioner limits the height of billboards to fourteen feet, requires a space of four feet between the ground and the bottom of the board, limits the area to 700 square feet and the length to forty feet and gives a license fee of $1 for every linear foot.

No billboard may approach nearer than 40 feet to a building or another billboard, and all boards must be placed back at least fifteen feet from the line of the lot.

FOR THE CHILDREN

An Intelligent Toad.

The United States department of agriculture has published a paper on the toad. It estimates that each adult toad eats 10,000 insects a year, most of which destroy the crops, about $20 per year, per season.

Toads eat the common housefly, which is such an annoyance to us. A toad has been seen to snap up eighty six flies in less than ten minutes.

Toads are sometimes kept for pets, and they are not lacking in intelligence. Once a toad lived in a garden, and every day at the dinner hour he came to be fed. It happened that the dinner hour was changed, and a day or two passed without anything for him to eat. Mr. Toad made up his mind that he would not lose his dinner twice. On the second day he came at the new hour, and after this he was as punctual as the rest of the family. No one could tell how he knew that in the future his dinner would be serve two hours earlier.

Adjectives—A Game.

"The cause of 'adjectives' is good to all in a half hour. Select one of the party to go out of the room. Then each person chooses an adjective, which he or she will represent, while the one outside comes in and asks questions, trying to determine the adjective being represented. For instance, the inquirer may say, 'Did you have a happy vacation?' and the person who has chosen the word 'happy' pure forth a perfect torrent of words, describing his vacation. To another person the question may be, 'Do you like dancing?' The reply should come in such a manner that turtles always make him so weary and life is such a bore, it which he hasten to weep. Or, when the word is 'soft.' This may continue indefinitely, and if the company is a reasonable one it is very amusing. After one person has guessed sevrra adjectives have another one go out.

Divisions.

Divide a color in two and get a bird very and soft light.

Divide to elevate in two, and get beneath and a place where minerals are found.

Divide to dress in two and get a preposition and to weary.

Divide a musicians in two and get to eat and a turkey.

Divide a fish in two and get a conjunction and a business transaction.

Divide a tree of remains in two and get a part of the body and work which the carpenter uses.

Answers—Yellow-yellow. Timber-timber-timber. Attire at-tire. Sup-port—support. Golden-goldenh. Neck-lace—necklace.

World's Coldest Town.

Where the rivers freeze to the bottom and small trees, cut off close by hitting force of the cold stands the coldest habitable city in the world—Verkoyansk, in northeastern Siberia.

It is a place of some three hundred souls. The thermometer seldom reaches zero in January, the average temperature is 50 degrees below zero. Its highest recorded temperature is 3 degrees above zero.

The Russian government owns the town and is interested in having an administrative center where exiles and insurgent Kolyuts, for trading Jews of Siberia, carry on their operations.—American Woman.

A Strange Family.

An Indiana farmer reports an interesting case of affection between and mule. When a horse died the mule became affected with fodder problem. He recently a family cat became the companion of the sick animal. After the animal died the cat was refused to leave the stall the horse had occupied. Soon afterward it died, and the farmer expressed the belief that its death was caused by grief for the loss of its companion.

NO AMERICAN CITY THRIFTY.

Davenport, Ia., Has Highest Per Capita Bank Account.

The American Society For Thrift, which recently sought information as to the thriftiest American city, discovers:

"For the present there is no 'thriftiest city.'

"We believe the returns go to confirm conclusions made in Bulletin No. 1 by President Simon W. Straus. But there must be more widespread knowledge of the principles of thrift and regard for its importance before small civil officers will regard thrift as a subject worthy of their best attention. In general, the replies received were tame or showed an indifference or resistance for thrift, which in a measure explains the rapidly increasing municipal debts. The fact that municipal bonds no longer are regarded as securities of the highest class is due to the extraordinary spending of public money.

"Nowhere is this extravagance more in evidence than in the affairs of Canada, in which Ottawa is located.

"While an attempt can be made, we wish to commend some cities upon their enterprise shown in promoting the welfare of their communities. These include Niagara Falls, N. Y.; Rockford, Ill.; Davenport, Ia., and Oil City, Pa.

"Of the cities competing, Davenport, Ia., reports the highest average per capita cash account—$1,000 in savings banks an average of $653. Hoover, Oil City, Pa., continues to lead in the per capita of stock and bond investment, with an average per capita of $500. As to the amounts of assessed valuation and municipal debts, the figures are too ludicrous to anybody any award or comment.

"Rockford, Ill., reports that regular and steady work has no place in that city and that the demand is for the best. Lack of thrift is given by the first and for the poorer and temperate habits among the citizens. Art has made remarkable progress in Rockford.

"North Yakima, Wash., makes an excellent showing in the reduction of tax rates under a commission form of government."

Secretarial Training.

During the past month five students of Harvard university began practical training for secretarial work. This will consist, under a cooperative arrangement between the Harvard Graduate school of Business Administration and the Boston chamber of commerce, of work of assistant secretaries in charge of various functions of the Boston chamber. Men selected will spend at least three afternoons each week upon the work of city planning, industrial relations, domestic and foreign trade, maritime affairs, fire protection and other committees.

Efforts are to be made to secure an intelligent appreciation of the theory of administration.

TELLS OF PERILS ROOSEVELT BRAVED IN AMAZON JUNGLES

Colonel and Kermit Tough as Coiled Wire, Says Returned Explorer.

Were the Natives Out on Terrible Hunt—Fish Nearly Lost Life.

ANTHONY FIALA, WHO TELLS OF PERILS IN AMAZON WOODS AMERICA.

Difficult from the wilds of the Amazon Capitain Anthony Fiala, explorer, artist and soldier, returned a thrilling story of the perils encountered in Brazilian jungles by himself and Colonel Roosevelt, who is expected home about May 17.

"We set out for the headwaters of the Paraguay river," said Captain Fiala, "on a Brazilian government boat and followed Roosevelt into the wilderness with a pack train. After 400 miles of marching through an unexplored country we came to the Duvida river, which in English is known as the River of Doubt. Up to the time of our arrival no white man had ever explored it. We set out from Tolmity, the last telegraph station in the wilds. Two days out of Tolmity we decided to split up our party. The colonel said he would follow the Duvida river, and I chose to explore the Pimenta river. The colonel and I parted in a drizzle of rain, and I was not back two days' journey.

Fight For Life In Rapids.

"The greatest hazard in South American exploration is the rapids and falls in the rivers. We met with disaster when we encountered the first rapids in the Pimenta river. I had with me a Brazilian civil engineer named Lima, a Brazilian sergeant and a native Indian. Lima was the only thing that saved us from utter disaster. The force of the current resulted in the loss of most of our provisions. Cutting, rifles, ammunition, Fiala's wife and two boys, and the little dog, Pi.

"Off the rifles competing, Davenport, Ia., reports the highest average per capita cash account—$1,000 in savings banks an average of $653. Hoover, Oil City, Pa., continues to lead in the per capita of stock and bond investment, with an average per capita of $500. WILDEST BATTLE OF THE WAR.

Colonel Roosevelt Tells Of Fierce Fight With Indians.

"When the colonel caught sight of us he began to grin. He was certainly a picturesque sight with his cut and bleeding face and torn clothes, but he was happy. He did not have any three cats, but he had led his party the wildest march they had ever been upon. It took those Brazilians forty two days before they recovered sufficiently to continue the march. The colonel had a good sleep and was as fit as ever.

"The principal difficulty every one in the party experienced was being without food. I lost over twenty pounds in three weeks. I believe Colonel Roosevelt lost more too. I never want to see another bean. Colonel Roosevelt, however, ate many of them and did not seem to mind having the same diet.

"The greatest luxury in the Amazon country is rain. We found them selling for 25 and 50 cents a bottle. Rain came across an English explorer who lassed on barbar boiled eggs every morning for breakfast, and that meant that everybody in the whole country said he had to go without the delicacy."

THE EXPENSIVE SANDWICH.

A New View of the "Pay- Man's Lunch" Shows Its Lack of Value.

Max Hulmer, a Bronx physiologist and hygienist, says the American lunch is becoming popular in German cities.

"The sandwich is not as economical as is popularly believed, says the Journal of the American Medical Association. It is true that a palatable sandwich can be purchased for a few cents, but the same proportionate expenditure in the household or in the purchase of a warm meal that deserves the name will procure surprisingly more nourishment, even in the more expensive type of restaurants. It has been calculated, for example, that 25 cents will buy:

Grams

In a public eating house 130 containing 30 grams of nourishment, 1,200 calories. In the form of sandwiches 130 containing 30 grams of nourishment, 130 calories.

The sandwich is frequently looked on as the "poor man's lunch," and certainly it is a convenient lunch for a man. If it is really desirable to increase the nourishment of a laborer's daily income so as to increase the amount of food, the reform cannot be instituted by installing in the supposedly inexpensive lunch counter.

EXPERIMENTAL ROADS.

Over 400,000 square yards of different types of roads for experimental and educational purposes were constructed during the fiscal year 1912-13 under the supervision of the office of public roads, United States department of agriculture, according to bulletin 53 of the department, which gives a total of over [illegible] square yards of road constructed under the auspices of this office since 1905.

The roads are of nearly forty varieties, consisting, all crushed, concrete, bituminous concrete, bituminous macadam, surface treatment macadam, sprinkling, oil-asphalt-gravel, oil-gravel, oil-macadam, gravel, sand-clay, sand, gumbo, burnt clay, steel and earth. The object lesson and experimental work during the past year was done at a cost to the local communities of $120,581.80. The data on hand include the cost of engineering of the department, and the total work performed during the year was done in Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Jersey, North Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, Wisconsin and the District of Columbia.

GOOD ROADS IN WISCONSIN.

The Counties Take Advantage of State Aid.

All the counties of Wisconsin are taking advantage of state aid for the improvement of their roads this year. The increasing popularity of this plan is described by John A. Hazelwood, chairman of the state highway commission, as follows:

"Wisconsin embarked upon a policy of construction of its highways in aid of the principal roads in the counties of the state in the enactment of the legislature in 1907, and under the policy of county aid twenty counties have accommodated a great deal of road prior to 1912.

"In 1911 the Wisconsin legislature decided upon the policy of state aid in addition to the county aid provided for in 1907 and made an appropriation of $2,000,000 annually to carry the policy into effect, during the year 1912 sixty-five counties out of seventy-one asked and received county and state aid, and the work was carried out of the seventy-one logs received county and state aid or highway betterment.

"The legislature of 1913, apparently appreciated the success and popularity of the state aid provision over that of the county aid policy, and appropriated $1,200,000 annually to carry along the good roads work. In 1911, by a substantial margin of one vote, the state appropriation was made for the new policy, while in 1913 every vote in both houses of the legislature, with the exception of seven, was cast for the $1,200,000 appropriation.

"Since the legislature adjourned the county clerks have prepared in good road work prior to this time have voted to come under the provisions of the state aid policy. Consequently in 1914 the entire state is carrying on road improvement under the state aid policy."

THE HORSELESS AGE.

Automobiles and Heavy Auto Trucks Make Road Problem Harder.

The astonishing results of a census taken recently on a secondary thoroughfare leading out of London show that only 3 per cent of home drawn vehicles. The exact count was fifteen vehicles of the latter class to 500 vehicles propelled otherwise than by horses. Herein lies an explanation of the failure of the public administration generally throughout the world to maintain roads and streets in good condition.

A similar example of the extraordinary change that has occurred in the use of roads in recent years is that of a French manufacturing concern in Paston Du., which delivers on its own trucks to New York and Boston. Its trucks are mostly constructed steel road-runners, the railroads. This concern, in its opinion, finds the road-building business is then transformed into a problem of construction to bear it to the country road and constructed for any such wants of civilized. It has then come to pass that the science of engineering, which was called upon to furnish experts to railroad companies, is now also called upon to furnish experts to road and highway authorities.

Colorado Good Roads Association.

During the recent convention of the Colorado Good Roads association it was seen on record as favoring greater development of the state highways among the plan adopted and by the state highway commission and as advocating a state system of one-half mile for road building. There was considerable debate on the relative merits of the half mill levy and a bond issue of $50,000,000. The advocates of the former succeeded in carrying the convention, and it is stated that there will be taken by the association to initiate at the November election a bill to make funds available for 1915.

Plan Highway Improvement.

Plans for highway improvement in Cedar Falls, Ia., in 1914, as suggested by the Cedar Falls Commercial club, contemplate the construction of a highway, extending from the north west, across a long stretch of river bottom, and the erection of a bridge across the Cedar river.

$18,000,000 BUILDS $50,000,000 ROADS.

Savings Effected Through Cash Purchase and County Aid.

California's state highway commission has solved the problem of providing a $50,000,000 system with the $18,000,000 it has, in the opinion of Charles D. Blanchy, a member of the board.

This has been accomplished for the most part, Blanchy says, by paying cash for materials at a saving of from 25 to 40 per cent. Crushed rock has been sold for $3 per cubic a ton as against $4.50 on time, and cement for from $1.18 to $1.30 a barrel as against from $1.70 to $2.40.

In this way, Blanchy goes on to explain, there have been established contractors, for they do not have to tie up from $20,000 to $50,000 in capital or so much of it for that amount.

Two million dollars is the estimated saving through this method.

Another $7,000,000 saving is estimated in having towns and cities contribute their pro rata portions of the highways and by getting counties to give the rights of way and build the bridges.

A million more has been economized by inducing the railroads to haul the materials and machinery at half rates. The railroads have been glad to make this concession, Blanchy says, because they realize that good roads mean increased passenger and freight revenue for them.

The 1,800 miles of trunk highway of the contemplated 2,700 miles are to be constructed with a concrete base, with asphalt or asphaltic concrete surface. The cost will be about $50 a mile.

The 1,200 miles of laterals are to be constructed of local materials or, if apply well gravel and drained, so that when the people's roads are built there will be necessary all that will be required will be to put on the surfacing. The proceeds will be 6 per cent. Oregon and Washington have so made their highway plans as to form a compact with the California system, which will give a road from Canada to Mexico with the same maximum grade.

The California system will be completed by the time the world's fair opens. The fees from automobile licenses will accept in repair.

HOW TO BUILD GOOD ROADS.

There is only one right solution of the road problem, and that is the construction of permanent roads. Every road built wholly or in part with funds provided by the state or federal government should have a length of life equal to the life of the bonds issued to pay the money to pay for them. The foundation, bridges, culverts and finishing touches at least should have such durability. Bridges and culverts should last themselves fairly burdened in paying off those out bonds and in the meantime raise enough money for the repair and renewal fund.

Spring and the housekeeping problem bring the subject of household linen home to the housewife. She may be glad to know that towels and other hand linen are being shown in many new and attractive styles.

NEW BATH TOWELS.

rooms. There are also pink and green and blue bath towels of pale, pretty colors and silky texture.

Hand-made of white English toweling are made with a big initial in color in the center.

The Correct Hand Towel.

Guests and bath towels are made of plain or bordered huckaback, pomeline or the border extends across the ends of the towels, which are finished below it with a one inch hemstitched hem. Dainty tea cloths are embroidered and are scalloped or hemstitched, and the border is a narrow one along both sides.

Above the end scalloping or hem stitch there is sometimes embroidery. Also many of the popular stitches and sometimes an initial worked in simple or elaborate design. The most durable towel is one hemstitched in a two inch hem.

Use of Embroidered Initial.

Some women always use a simple, single letter embroidered in satin stitch on all their household linen. They choose this mark and stick to it. The single letter is the most usual mark at present anyway. On towels it is placed far above the hem, if there is some portiere or lock, if the letter is small, further above if the letter is large. On pillowcases the letter has the same position it has on the towels.

If the towels and pillowcases are scalloped and embroidered at the end the letter is generally in a wreath or festoon of the border embroidery. Sheets should be marked an inch or so from the hem in the center. If they are marked on the corners the letter or letters do not show when the sheets are in use.

Marking Napkins.

Napkins are marked with the letter placed diagonally so that it will be in the center of the square of the folded napkin. Tablecloths are marked so that the letter rests on the table near the edge.

Ink marking, of course, should be as fine as possible. A crooked or sprawling marking is conspicuous. Tablecloths and napkins should be marked on the wrong side. The initial can be done on strips of narrow linen tape, which should then be neatly sewed on. Sheets are marked in the corner, on the hem and pillowcases are marked on the wrong side of the hem. Towels are also marked on the wrong side.

A Stencil Marker.

Some persons have copper stencil plates made for marking them. These plates, of course, can be made in any design, and they are quite the easiest device for linen marking.

Indelible ink for marking may be made at home. Dissolve two parts of nitrate of silver in five parts of liquid ammonia and dissolve two and a half parts of gum arabic and three parts of carbonate of soda separately in four parts of distilled water. When these ingredients are dissolved mix them together. Warm the mixture slightly, and it will turn brown. If a decidedly colored ink is wanted add a few drops of solution of magenta.

Folding Canopy and Screen to Bar Flies.

It will take a landy and perseverting fly to get in through a door that is equipped with an elaborate apparatus designed by an Iowa woman. As every one knows, it is impossible to keep the out of a house, no matter how carefully it is screened, because every time a door is opened a detachment that has been sitting on it flies in. But here is something that should keep them out. A folding canopy that is attached to the top of a door and the top of the door frame unfolds as the former opens and forms a screen there. Along the outer edge of the door frame is a folding screen that normally is closed against the frame, but that drops of its own weight when the door opens and presents a shelf that throws the prize away until the door has time to swing to again.

Household Hints.

Prunes cooked in the oven are richer and better in flavor than when stewed on top of the stove.

Dry the toilet well before you put it away. A few drops of water left standing in it will soon cut a rust hole through the metal.

Many dishwashing burns may be saved the housekeeper if she will perfect her habits by wearing large, loose kitchen or cloth gloves when working about the stove and reaching into the oven.

When beating up the whites of eggs add a tiny pinch of salt. You will be surprised to feel how much better and faster they will beat up.

To bake potatoes quickly boil them in salted water for ten minutes, then put them in the oven. The boiling water will heat them through and they will bake in a short time.

Baked Pork and Eggs.

In a shallow enamel pie plate lay as many very thin slices of salt pork as you have people to serve. Put in a hot oven, and when the slices are browned slightly turn them the other side up, arranging them with a space between. Break an egg into each space; place a bit of salt on each egg and return the plate to the oven. If your pan is like they eggs "hard," turn them, letting them brown on both sides slightly. Have ready a hot platter with slices of well browned toast that have been dipped in salted hot water. Lay the eggs on the toast and take up the pork on a separate hot platter, drinking each slice dry of fat.

Cream Muffins.

Cut two level tablespoonfuls of sugar, beat the whites of two eggs to a stiff froth, add the unbeaten yolks to the butter and sugar and cream together, then add one cupful of sweet milk, one half teaspoonful of salt, two cupfuls of sifted flour and two large teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Fill well then add the beaten whites of the eggs. Carefully fill muffin pans two-thirds full and bake twenty minutes in a hot oven. Substitute one cupful of graham, coarse rye or corn meal for one half of the weight of wheat flour and you will have different meal muffins.

Scalloped Potatoes.

Pare, slice enough into not too fine pieces potatoes enough to make two quarts. Butter a pudding dish, and butter several slices of bread liberally. Put in a layer of potatoes and sprinkle liberally with salt. Cover with the bread slices. Add more salted potatoes, dotting with more bread, and continue until the dish is full—the last layer being bread, the buttered side up. Bake in a slow oven for one to thirty minutes.

Mother's Fried Cakes.

Two eggs, one cupful of sugar, one cupful of sweet milk, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter or lard, one teaspoonful of soda, two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar sifted with the flour and just flour enough to roll out and cut. Place with mincemeat or to taste. As the cakes are removed from the hot fat place on a paper to absorb the fat.

Scrambled Eggs For the Sick.

Beat one egg slightly, add a teaspoonful of butter, a little salt and pepper and sufficient of a cupful of hot milk. Pour into a double boiler and stir over hot water until it is thick and creamy and serve on a slice of hot toast.

THE REFUGEE'S BETRAYAL

An Episode of the French Revolution.

During the French revolution Mme. de Four and Mme. Breton, two friends, found themselves on opposite sides. Mme. de Four's husband took sides with the revolutionists, while M. Breton was a royalist. One day Mme. Breton came hastily from her chateau and told her friend that young Victor Breton was to be arrested.

An account during the reign of terror meant death. The young man must be concealed, and the two women, married, by consulted as to how this could be best accomplished. Mme. de Four finally agreed that he should come to her house, provided he could be taken there without being seen. But how was this to be done? It was morning, and as the arrest was liable to take place that afternoon he must go in broad daylight. Therefore, she the mother and her friend could not wait for darkness, some disguise was essential, and as the boy was only twenty, had no beard, but did have a pair of pink cheeks, they decided to put him into girl's clothes. Young Breton, having dressed feminine attire, walked down the canal, passing "citizens" who were watching to see that he did not leave the house. Mme. de Four picked him up in her carriage, and he drove with her to her chateau. Once there he was introduced as Mme. de Four's niece.

The risk Mme. de Four was running in concealing a royalist kept her in agony of fear, for if discovered she would fall under the ban of the revolutionist. She would have better taking her husband or at least her daughter into her confidence. Louise de Four was only eighteen, but was far beyond her years in good sense. Besides, women are far better fitted for aiding and abetting such concealment than men. Madame's keeping her secret from her husband was in getting to the revolutionists. Louise spoke to a friend about her cousin, wondering why she had never heard of her before and why she always kept her room. This friend told the police.

One evening there was a stormy scene at the De Fours'. M. de Four came home and told his wife not to see any suspicion of harboring young Breton. Madame confessed to her husband, and the dinner threatening the whole family being of the greatest interest. Louise was called into the conference. She saw at once that it had miscarried and put the hounds on the scent. But now that she knew all she proved the most fertile of any of them in expedient. She had a plan and stuck to it in execution.

It was just after dinnerthat a corporal of the guard, accompanied by a woman, reached the De Four chateau.

"Corporal," said M. de Four, "proceed with your search. The premises are at your service, and if any royalist is hiding here I hope you will find him."

"Hm!" said the corporal, who knew well who was suspected. "Summon the inmates of the chateau!"

This was done, and when all were assembled the corporal at once turned his attention to the slave who had lately come and who was present with the others.

"Who is this person?" asked the corporal.

"My niece, Julie de Four," replied Mme. de Four.

"Another?"

"My daughter."

"Mme. Rosinal," said the corporal to the woman who had accompanied him, "take Mlle. Julie de Four aside and see if she is a woman."

The woman called the niece to one end of the room and ordered her to button her dress from the throat.

"What," she exclaimed. "Is it really so? She's a woman."

"Fy, girl! Who has put us to all this trouble for nothing?" exclaimed the corporal.

"If it is any one in this house," said M. de Four with dignity, "I demand to be informed who has done it."

"Monsieur need not suspect any one here. The information came from the outside. I am sorry to have troubled so good a friend to the cause. Honsieur, I bid you good evening."

Who shall be led the man and the woman, Rosinal, away. As soon as they had gone M. and Mme. de Four, Louise and the niece went upstairs and entered a room for conference. She who had been Louise took the hand of her who had been the niece and said:

"A thousand thanks, mademoiselle. I owe you my life."

"Yes, and you come pretty near losing me your death. It was I who innocently gave you away."

Louise took off a wig and, going to a basin, began to wash paint from her face. During the process part of her nose came off, a thin slice of her cheeks and the paint of her chin. She had made herself up to play the part of the suspected niece, and Victor Breton was similarly altered to look like her.

The next day Mme. de Four, with Julie (Victor Breton), drove to the hotel whence the post started for Paris. The niece took her departure and the same evening Victor, in maid's attire, left the capital with a party of emigrants for the border. When the Bourbons were restored he entered the service of the king and was instrumental in saving from bankbrupt M. de Four, who had become prominent as a revolutionist. The families were, however, inseparable united in the marriage of Victor and Louise.

Noted Dramatic Baritone, Who Has Sung With World Famous Orchestras, Coming Chautauqua Week

MARCUS A. KELLERMAN

MARCUS A. KELLERMAN, who is to appear here during Chautauqua week, is one of the greatest dramatic baritones in America today. He has toured as vocal soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra under Walter Damrosch, the Minneapolis Symphony under Emil Oberhoffer, the St. Paul Symphony under Walter Rothwell, and his appearances with the Boston, the Theodore Thomas and the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestras have gained for him universal commendation.

Kellerman is a native American, but some of his greatest successes have been rendered in foreign countries. In Germany, for three years, he sang leading baritone roles at the Berlin Royal Opera.

It was while achieving success as an organist that Kellerman discovered his ability as a vocalist, and, appreciating the increased opportunity offered in the field of song, he pursued himself for the task.

After a few years Kellerman abandoned his brilliant, promising career to engage in lieder and oratorio singing. The great success he has already attained indicates that concert patrons are quite fortunate, even though opera has lost an artist of first rank.

Coming Chautauqua Week—The Denton Grand Opera Company

ON the evening that Kept and his Land appear in the two day musical festival of Chautauqua week the Denton Grand Opera Company will present selections from grand opera in special costume, with musical accompaniment by the band. When the date of this company at any Chautauqua comes on Sunday they will present selections from the oratorion instead of grand opera.

Simeon Denton, the owner of this company, appeared one season with the Aborn Opera Company, New York, and one season with the Romany Opera Company, in the same city. His voice is a tenor of very wide range, and he is a musician of high order and beautiful quality. He has appeared in such roles as Count in "Il Trovatore" and the baritone role in "Faglacci."

O'Neal Corrigan has a high soprano voice. The Musical Courier, Chicago, says that her voice is a high soprano, well poised, flexible and to which all the intricacies of the Monnet coloratures are mere play.

Plant Lavender Seeds.

Those who like sachets of dried lavender in their linen closets and bureau drawers may raise all of the delicate flavors they can use by planting the seeds in a shallow box filled with dirt by about April. When the tiny plants are a few inches high transplant them in small flowerpots and when the ground is warm enough set them out of doors. Two or three plants will yield all the lavender one will be likely to use.

Health and Music.

Health is of the first importance to any business or profession, but in the musical profession it is the very essence of its whole thing. And how to preserve that health is the bugbear of a musician's life.

Town Development Magazine says: If you can't benefit your community in any other way make it a point to improve yourself. That will help some.

Two level tablespoonfuls of soft butter, two level tablespoonfuls of sugar, first the whites of two eggs to a stiff froth, and the unbeaten yolks to the butter and sugar and cream together, then add one cupful of sweet milk, one half teaspoonful of salt, two cupfuls of sifted flour and two large teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Beat well, then add the beaten whites of the eggs. Cure fully fill muffin pans two-thirds full and bake twenty minutes in a hot oven. Substitute one cupful of graham, cornmeal, rye or entire wheat flour for one cupful of wheat flour and you will have different meal muffins.

Scalloped Potatoes.

Pare, then chop into not too fine pieces potatoes enough to make two quarts. Butter a pudding dish, and butter several inches of bread lightly. Put in a layer of potatoes and sprinkle lightly with salt. Cover with the bread slices. Add more salted potatoes, topping with more bread, and continue until the dish is full—the last layer being bread, the buttered side up. Bake in a slow oven forty-five to sixty minutes.

Mother's Fried Cakes.

Two eggs, one cupful of sugar, one cupful of sweet milk, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter or lard, one teaspoonful of soda, two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar sifted with the flour and just flour enough to roll out and cut. Flavor with nutmeg or to taste. As the cakes are removed from the hot fat place on a paper to absorb the fat.

Scrambled Eggs For the Sick.

Heat a cup of milk, add a teaspoonful of butter, a little salt and pepper and one-fourth of a cupful of hot water. Pour into a double boiler and stir over hot water until it is thick and creamy and serve on a slice of hot toast.

THE REFUGEE'S BETRAYAL

An Episode of the French Revolution.

During the French revolution Mme. de Four and Mme. Breton, two friends, found themselves on opposite sides. Mme. de Four housed some aristocrats with the revolutionists, while M. Breton was a royalist. One day Mme. Breton came hastily from her chateau and told her friend that young Victor Breton was to be arrested.

An arrest during the reign of terror meant death. The young man must be concealed, and the two women hastily consulted as to how this could be best accomplished. Mme. de Four finally agreed that he should come to her house, provided he could be taken there without being seen. But how was this to be done? It was snowing, and as the arrest was liable to take place that afternoon he must go in broad daylight. Therefore, since the mother and her friend could not wait for darkness, some disguise was essential, and as the boy was only twenty, had no beard, but did have a pair of pink cheeks, they decided to put him into girl's clothes. Young Breton, having donned feminine attire, walked down the road, passing "citizens" who were watching to see that he did not leave the house. Mme. de Four picked him up in her carriage, and he drove with her to her chateau. Once there he was introduced as Mme. de Four's niece.

The Job Mme. de Four was running in concealing a royalist kept her in an agony of fear, for if discovered she would fall under the ban of the revolutionists. She would have better taking her brainless self at least her double for lady-in-waiting. Louise de Four was only eighteen, but was far beyond her years in good sense. Besides, women are far better fitted for acting and deceiving much more successful than men. Madame's keeping her secret from Louise resulted in its getting to the revolutionists. Louise spoke to a friend about her cousin, wondering why she had never heard of her before and why she always kept her room. This friend told the police.

One evening there was a strong search of the De Fours. M. de Four came home and told his wife that he was suspected of harboring young Breton. Madame confessed to her husband, and the danger threatening the whole family being of the greatest moment, Louise was called into the conference. She saw at once that to her ignorance she had put the hounds on the scent. But now that she knew all she proved the most fertile of any of them in expedient. She told a plan and it was put into operation.

It was just after dark that a corporal and six men, accompanied by a woman, received the De Four chateau.

"Corporal," said M. de Four, "proceed with your search. The premises are at your service, and if any recruit is hiding here I hope you will find him."

"Pig!" said the corporal, who knew well who was suspected. "Summon the inmates of the chateau."

This was done, and when all were accounted the corporal at once turned his attention to the niece who had lately come and who was present with the others.

"Who is this person?" asked the corporal.

"My niece, Julie de Four," replied Mme. de Four.

"And title?"

"My daughter."

"Mme. Roussal," said the corporal to the woman who had accompanied him, "take Mlle. Julie de Four aside and see if she is a woman."

The woman called the niece to one end of the room and ordered her to unbutton her dress from the throat.

"Wou!" she exclaimed. "Is it really not? She's a woman!"

"Fly girl! Why has put us to all this trouble for nothing?" exclaimed the corporal.

"If it is any one in this house," said M. de Four with dignity, "I demand to be informed who he or she is."

"Monsieur need not suspect any one here. The information came from the outside. I am sorry to have troubled so good a friend to the cause. Monsieur, I bid you good evening."

With that he led his men and the woman, Roussal, away. As soon as they had gone M. and Mme. de Four, Louise and the niece went upstairs and entered a room for conference. She who had been Louise took the hand of her who had been the niece and said:

"A thousand thanks, mademoiselle. I owe you my life."

"Yes, and you come pretty near owing me your death. It was I who innocently gave you away."

Julien took off a wig and, going to a basin, began to wash paint from her face. During the process part of her nose came off, a thin slice of her cheeks and the point of her chin. She had made herself up to play the part of the suspected niece, and Victor Breton was similarly altered to look like her.

The next day Mme. de Four, with Julie (Victor Breton), drove to the hotel where the post started for Paris, the niece took her departure and the same evening Victor, in man's attire, left the capital with a party of emigrants for the border. When the Bourbons were restored he entered the service of the king and was instrumental in saving from banishment M. de Four, who had become prominent as a revolutionist. The families were, however, inseparable united in the marriage of Victor and Louise.

Noted Dramatic Baritone, Who Has Sung With World Famous Orchestras, Coming Chautauqua Week

MARCUS A. KELLERMAN

MARCUS A. KELLERMAN, who is to appear here during chautauqua week, is one of the greatest dramatic baritones in America today. He has toured as vocal soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra under Walter Damrosch, the Minneapolis Symphony under Emil Oberhoffer, the Paul Kempf orchestra under Walter Rothwell, and his appearances with the Boston, the Theodore Thomas and the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestras have gained for him universal commendation.

Kellerman is a native American, but some of his greatest successes have been achieved in foreign countries. In Germany, for three years, he sang leading baritone roles at the Berlin Royal Opera.

It was while achieving success as an organist that Kellerman discovered his ability as a vocalist, and, appreciating the increased opportunity offered in the field of song, he prepared himself for the task.

After a few years Kellerman abandoned his brilliant, remunerative organ career for the more exacting, though more lucrative and more glorious together with the usual interest at the rate of six per cent per annum from the date of the publication of this notice, to the purchaser or purchasers entitled thereto, and the costs of these proceedings, and the expenses of said sale, as provided by statute.

Coming Chautauqua Week—The Denton Grand Opera Company

ON the evening that Kryl and his band appear in the two day musical festival of Chautauqua week the Denton Grand Opera Company will present selections from grand opera in special costume, with musical accompaniment by the band. When the date of this company at any Chautauqua comes on Sunday they will present selections from the oratorios instead of grand opera.

Shannon Dutton, the tenor of this company, appeared one season with the Abora Opera Company, New York, and one season with the Romany Opera Company, in the same city. His voice is a lyric tenor of very waterange.

Rose Bland, contralto of this company, sang the leading contralto roles in Chicago for three years. She has a remarkably rich, full voice of very wide range and also histrionic ability.

H. Stanley Denton, the baritone, was the leading baritone with Pavanow Opera Company last season. He has a voice of wide range and beautiful quality. He has appeared in such roles as "Il Trovatore" and "Lucia" and in Bohemian Girl in "Bohemian."

Jean Neal Dorrance has a high soprano voice. The Musical Courier, Chicago, says that her voice is a high soprano well placed, flexible and to which all the intricacies of the Mozart colouratures are mere clay.

AXIOMS FOR THE CITY BEAUTIFUL.

Love your neighbor's lot as you do your own, but be sure to love your own.

Don't plant lombsto cans and rubbish on unused land. These features are wilfered civic pride.

Don't allow yourself or your city to create dumps for waste. It can be made to pay for its own destruction at a profit.

Don't allow tumbled down buildings to stand on valuable land. They are financially wasteful. They create filth, invite vice and are a menace to life.

A fence that has ceased to be a fence and has become an offense should be repaired or destroyed.

Unsignsed advertising on unused land pays for the maintenance of a public nuisance.

Two gardens may grow where one dump has bloomed before.

School boards are valuable adjuncts to education and recreation. They can be a drain on an open lot.

Let the children play on the unused land so that they may become strong and keep out of the hands of the law.

Let not an inch of land be kept in bloom. It has a divine right to bear fruits and flowers and ever serve the highest interest of man.

Water Stains on Furniture.

To remove water stains from varnished furniture pour olive oil into a dish and scrape a little white soap into it. This will not injure the least bit until the wax melts, then rub briskly on the stains. Finally rub the surface with a soft linen rag until it is restored to brilliancy.

Removing Paint From Glass.

Take aerific acid and dilute it one half in hot water, then apply to the paint spots on the glass while it is hot. If it does not come off at first the hot acid will not hurt the handle fabrics or the glass, but it must be kept from children.

Don Stacks and wife are here as guests at the home of Judge Mayne.

Mrs. Lizzie Martin, of Elgin, Ill., is here visiting her brother, Fred Coon.

Seven automobiles came off the steamship Missouri at this point Sunday.

Mrs. Widdifield and son Kenneth left Tuesday for Toronto and Newmarket where they will visit relatives.

Mrs. Ray Assion is entertaining her sister and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Summers, of Spokane, Wash.

Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Worth, of Chicago, are visiting Mrs. Worth's mother, Mrs. Chester Blanchard, of Hayes township.

Mr. Carl Holbrook, of Clare, was a guest at the Methodist parsonage Monday.

Forest L. Bartholomew, of Chicago, is here for a short visit, on business and pleasure combined.

Rev. Quinton Walker was called to Big Rapids to attend the funeral services of Mrs. W. I. Cogshall.

If Senator Scott had drifted into Fish Rapids at an opportune time with a Sixpoint ad this row would have been still born.

F. J. Kibbe, of this city, has been appointed a surfman at South Chicago station, and left yesterday for his new course. Mr. Kibbe has been a clerk at the Sugar Bowl for a year.

The Baptist pastor will hold a service in the Burgess school house on Sunday next, July 19th, at 3 p. m. He will give an address on the annual meetings of the Baptist association, held this year in Gaylord.

Mrs. Bessie McDonough was brought here Friday from St. James by Deputy Sheriff Roddy, having become violently deranged. She was adjudged insane in probate court Saturday and taken to Traverse City hospital by Undersheriff Novak.

The SENTINEL received a call Tuesday from Ray W. Howard, of New York, president of the United Press Associations, and W. Lee Nelson, second vice-president and general news manager of that organization. Both are guests at this inn.

It is getting to be a hazardous undertaking to cross Bridge street, or any intersecting street during the busy hours of the day. What with the traffic, gas and the delivery outfits, at least one-third of them exceeding the speed limit, you need eyes in the back of your head.

It is a gloomy prospect that the packers hold out for the coming season, so far as the price of beef is concerned, for the shortage of the cattle crop is already being felt by a sharp advance in price. The advance will of course have to be paid by the consumer and the producer will continue to reap their accustomed reward.

A valuable canoe was stolen at Traverse last week and was traced north by Sheriff Smith, of Leelanau county, and found at Fishermen's Island near this place Friday. With the canoe was the thief, Donald McKinnie, commonly known up the bay as Mickey Shay. He was jailed here Friday night and Saturday was taken to Traverse City.

There another Charlevoix "nigger in the fence" in the local conspiracy against one-armed Frank Scott, and when the nigger gets loose it will not reflect any brilliant credit upon the parties responsible for arresting the colored party. There was never a dirtier deal conceived than that aimed at Senator Scott by a Charlevoix ambush; but it will not work.

Comrade Harrison Berdan and Comrade Henry Burr came together the other day with interesting results. It developed that they were born within two miles of each other in Wayne county. Comrade Burr served in the 1st Michigan cavalry and Berdan in the 5th Michigan cavalry, both in Kilpatrick's brigade, and both fought at Gettysburg. The first time they ever met to know each other was in Charlevoix.

A certain distinguished Charlevoix citizen has, in a recent interview pledged Charlevoix county for Mr. Bayliss. It is a good thing to see such political thus concentrated. It simplifies the situation when the vote of a county can be carried round in a vest pocket. It has not been so very long since the same distinguished citizen possessed the same autocratic power in the democratic county.

Chas. S. Osborn, Battle Creek, who is campaigning in the upper penisula for the Republican nomination for the governorship at the August primaries is meeting with an enthusiastic reception in his home county north of the straits. Mr. Osborn's speeches have attracted large crowds and he appears pleased as very well satisfied with the results attained thus far on a tour.

Heavy arrivals every day by boat and rail, hotels aboard, full and cottages in great demand.

Look out for the concert at the Baptist church July 29th. Full notice next week.

Miss Nea Hoole, of Mancelona, spent the week end with Rev. Quinton Walker and family.

Hon. E. A. Correll is in Bay City the week attending the annual convention of probate judges.

The small steamer Pierce was towed here from Grand Traverse Bay Saturday with a broken shaft.

Mrs. W. J. Rachow was called to Toronto by the critical illness of her sister. She left Friday evening.

William Witmer, of Marion, fell over backward off a load of hay one day last week and fractured his collar bone.

The Charlevoix Lumber Co. has opened a new field of industry. At its factory in this city it now manufactures silos, and has one erected as a sample.

The contributions received on Patriots Day for the Michigan Child Welfare League were very gratifying to the committee in charge; the amount being [illegible].

Mrs. August Finkbiner, of Calcomia, Mich., is here on a visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Archie McNeil. A graduate of the literary department of Hillsdale College, Mr. Holliday's entering the Columbia University at the time will give our schools the benefit of the best methods of school work in the United States, as this University is in a class by itself among leading educators of the country.

An Ionia special says: Dr. Frederick A. Cook was the attraction today at the Ionia Chautauqua. He spoke to a large crowd that filled the tent and during his remarks handed Commodore Peary without gloves, declaring he was ready to back up every thing he said, even to the court. The crowd applauded like mad throughout the address. He maintained his claim that he was the real pole discoverer and appealed to the petitions which were circulated here asking congress to give him a hearing and to consider the measures that have recently been presented to congress. After the lecture Cook was surrounded by crowds of people who manifested their favorable consideration of his address and crowded one another to sign the Cook petitions to congress.

Heart to Heart Talks

COMFORT FOR THE SOUL.

We build for our bodies houses as comfortable as we can. Porch and entrance and hall, living room, kitchen, sleeping apartments—all are designed to afford ease to the occupants. The best architect is he who can plan a house with the greatest number of conveniences.

It is so important to house the body properly!

But for us now.

Oh, any old home will do for that! We remain "house" in presence as we do that of our bodies. It is not an inherent, instinctive part of ourselves like our hands or feet or hearts or lungs. Therefore, any sort of mental habitation will answer for the most precious portion of ourselves, that which most of us believe will survive when the body is moldered away.

The Rev. Dr. Frank Gunsaulus Ward, dean of the Chicago Theological seminary, says:

"It is not an uncommon thing to think of the soul as having a house of its own in which it lives. This home of the soul is really made up of our habits of thought, of things that are uppermost in our minds, of the groove of ideas to which we constantly turn.

"Now, the larger the number of things which we think about in the right way the bigger will be the house in which we live. It is too bad when people are content to live in little houses when they really can have large ones."

Perhaps you can't afford to house your body in a large house.

But your soul—

For that you may have a mansion as spacious and beautiful as you will. You may adorn it with thoughts of noble life that will resist on you to your lasting good, as the opposite sentiment resets on the bodily structure.

It is an alluring prospect, that of honoring your soul in the finest habitation you will, without regard to your material circumstances.

Build the best House—

Build the more stately mansion, O my soul,
As the days grow colder,
Leaving the world behind
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till from its lofty top at last
Thou mayest look through death, and see God stand
Waiting and watching for the souls He loves
Through the great gates of the eternal morn.

It is hoped everyone will buy a ticket. All proceeds go to Pastor Irvine, as an expression of appreciation for the suffering he has had with his poisoned hand. COME IN CROWDS

CURIOUS RESEMBLANCES IN NATURE

by Robert H. Moulton

FOR GRACE in natural objects a resemblance, either structural or pictorial, to other objects with which they have no real connection is a directing pastime. Moreover, though at first thought it may seem somewhat puerile, it can in fact be turned to good account; as a means of stimulating the imagination, and inducing the mind to embark upon a course of true scientific investigation which may lead to important discoveries. This applies in particular to the youthful student. All those who have gained experience as teachers will readily admit the initial difficulty which exists in arousing the intelligent interest of a class in study. In other words, something is needed to set the machinery of the mind in motion. For example, a flower or an insect, as such, may fail to evoke the desired response. But if we can point out some curious or grotesque likeness which it bears to a familiar creature or thing, we are sure from this starting point to lead on by carefully planned stages to such great questions as structure, natural affinity, and adaptation to environment.

When nature is in one of her imitative moods, the product of her working frequently bear all the earmarks of a deliberate fake. Occasionally they seem to have been conceived, or executed in a spirit of spontaneous. As an indication of this mood, the remarkable Tulip craze of Holland which had attracted the attention of science, stands forth as a conspicuous example.

In Japanese tradition there is a story to the effect that many years ago a great naval battle was fought in the Sea of Japan between the Heike pirates and Japanese, resulting in the total destruction of the pirate fleet. The story continues that since then all of the crabs of a certain species found on that part of the coast have borne on their backs the face of a Japanese warrior.

An examination of one of these crabs reveals at a glance the somewhat startling visage. The human-like face is not only there, and typically oriental in appearance at that, but actually resembles the face of a devil.

Whether the Japanese then, or the Twin ... offers good evidence of the transmigration of the souls of dead bodies into the bodies of lower animals be accepted or not, the phenomena described is certainly very interesting. Another curious thing about this crab is the fact that it is equipped on its back with four short supplementary legs, which are shown in the accompanying photograph at the extreme right of the mouth of the devil, so that it actually turned upside down, it is able to run quite as well in that fashion as in its ordinary position. The advantages of such an equipment will readily be appreciated by those who have witnessed the awkward efforts of other species of crabs, turtles, and various kinds of bugs to right or propel themselves when lying on their backs.

Another remarkable example of typical radial affinities is found in the outline of a fin-back whale which was picked up on a Norway beach. It has all the features of a Scandinavian face, low cheek bones, well defined brows, flat nose, bridge, small upper lip and receding jaw. In profile appearance, however, the face is more like a death mask than that of a living person. That this, as such, is a fresh conception is proved by an examination of the sar-bones of other finback whales at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, all of which have substantially the same form.

In the plant kingdom nature's imitations are equally astonishing and much more numerous than in either the animal or vegetable kingdoms. There are several species of orchids, for instance, bearing popular names which suggest the likeness of the flower to some member of the animal kingdom, among them being the man orchid, the bee orchid, the spider orchid, the lizard orchid, and the holy ghost orchid. While it is true that some of the suggested likenesses are more or less fanciful, others are so perfect and distinct and will bear close scrutiny. This is particularly true of the holy ghost orchid, which contains within each of its blossoms a pigeon with both spread wings. It is necessary to view the blossom from squarely in front, as in the case of the lower specimen shown in the accompanying photograph, to get the full effect of the resemblance. When viewed from this position, the bird is so perfect that it looks as if ready to take flight. The plant, which is a native of the isthmus of Panama, is very rare, there being perhaps not more than half a dozen specimens in the United States, including two in the greenhouses of the White House at Washington. It grows sturdily, but in order to thrive, has to be kept in a hothouse with the temperature of a Turkish bath.

In all of the instances referred to above the resemblance is mainly due to the lip or labellum of the bloom. Now orchids rank admittedly among the most highly specialized flowers, while their extraordinary modifications are the result largely if not entirely of insect interference. Many of these flowers depend entirely upon the visits of insects for pollination, and without the aid of them stand eminently of Cupid they are quite unable to get used. The labellum is the recognized alighting platform upon which the insect settles to get at the nectar, the purpose of the flower in search of nectar; and as orchids are so elaborately constructed with insects, we must assume that the special shape of the labellum in each instance is more or less definitely related to the convenience of the guests that are specially catered for by the flower in question in certain instances the resemblance seems to be the case. Throughout the great orchid family the labellum exhibits an almost endless variety of configuration, and we are justified in the assumption that each form is exactly adapted to attract, or up hold a particular kind of insect.

Most young people are familiar with the canary-bird flower or common canary creeper, and here again we find that the unusual form of the blossom is due to insect visits. The blossom of this group of plants seem especially designed to meet the needs of long-tongued moths, which seldom or never settle on the flower, but hover in front of it, lightly poised on their rapidly-moving wings. While in this position the tongue is uncoiled and thrust far back into the "spur" of the flower where the nectar is stored. Meanwhile, the head or body of the moth comes into contact with the pistil or stamens, and pollen is deposited or removed, as the case may be.

A very curious plant, which has been famous since ancient times, is the "vegetable lamb"—or as the Chinese call it, the "gold-haired dog." It looks remarkably like an animal, and in early days was popularly supposed to combine in some mysterious way the attributes of animal and plant. The belief was that it sprang from a seed and grew up to a certain height, and then bent down within reach, whereupon it perished of starvation. As a matter of fact, it is merely the root stock of a plant, which, densely covered with soft, golden-brown hair, suggests a likeness to a quadruped.

A strange plant found in New Zealand is known as the "vegetable sheep" because of its woolly foliage. In fact, the vegetable kingdom offers an almost endless variety of curious imitations. The resemblance of the common garden snapdragon look exactly like small human heads arranged on the stalks like "poles or axils," such as are set up in certain countries where beheading is a popular amusement. These show not merely the head and face, but dress clothes and coiffure. But, after sitting quietly baddies for some time, hardly daring to move for fear lest they should be discovered, one of them, who seemed to be the leader, looked up and saw him and called out, "Hullo, look, there's a daddy up there! And whatever is he yelling about?"

Which reminds me of two little nephews of mine who were taken to church by a very old and very formal aunt. She, thinking to impress the little ones with the importance of the occasion, said, "You know, Jack and Fred, it is only the highest of the great ones who ever pass of him goes to heaven!"

There are probably many mothers who have had cause to smile at the quaint additions which their children at times have made to their prayers. A friend of mine on one occasion listened to a ventriloquist entertainment, which impressed her very much. While sitting her prayers that night she added God to look after all her brothers and sisters and make her a good girl. Then there was a pause, and one heard, sotto voce, "All right."

CHEESE AS A FOOD.

In some parts of Europe cheese is used in the same way as meat. The fact that it is not more commonly used here is probably due to several causes. One is habit, which makes a meal seem incomplete unless it includes meat; another is the fact that since cheese has a more pronounced flavor than meat it is not so likely to be generally agreeable as the chief food of a meal. Another cause is that it is commonly believed to be indigestible, and still another is the fact that housekeepers, through lack of experience, are much less skillful in the arrangement of dishes in which cheese is the central food than they are in arranging menus in which meat is the central.

Cheese has nearly twice as much protein, weight for weight, as beef of average composition, and its energy and heat-supplying power is more than twice as great. It also contains an appreciable amount of mineral matter. Recent experiments have shown that when eaten raw or carefully cooked, cheese is as thoroughly digested as other staple foods, and is not likely to produce physiological disturbances.

The American factory cheese, the so-called American cream cheese of the English cheese type, is the most commonly used of all commercial varieties in the United States. It is made from sweet cows' milk, which may be skimmed, partly skimmed, or unskimmed. If made from unskimmed milk, the cheese is called "full cream". If the cream is removed, it is designated as "part skim" or "skim," as the case may be. Many other kinds of cheese are of course sold in this country, Swiss cheese and the different varieties of cream cheese being especially well liked.

One of the best ways of keeping cheese which has been cut is to wrap it in a slightly damp cloth or parafin paper may be used—and then in paper, and to keep it in a cool place. To dampen the cloth, sprinkle it and then wring it out in some dry cloth by hand, so that it comes merely to the touch. When cheese is put in a covered dish, the air should never be wholly confined, for it is the cheese molds more readily.

In some markets it is possible to buy the small whole cheeses. These may be satisfactorily kept by cutting a slice from one end, serve as a cover, and removing the cheese ha needed. It is noticed that the hardware store knobs watch, inserted in the large end from the top, make it easy to handle.

The customary use of highly flavored cheese is a mistake. It is recommended as a simple way of adding to the attractiveness of a dish. They should, however, accompany a moderate rather than a very generous meal.

Cheese may, however, be used as a flavoring or tiousness combined immediately, with a meal. It may be packed in tube and placed in cold storage. Sometimes it is formed into rolls or blocks and wrapped in paper when marketed. Such cheese is used without ripening.

Though cottage cheese is usually made by allowing the milk to curd naturally, it is sometimes more convenient to curdle the milk by adding rennet and some housekeepers have a preference for cottage cheese thus made, since the flavor is milder and the acid taste which it possesses when made from sour milk is lacking.

Baked Roast—One round cut of kidney beans or equivalent quantities of cooked beans, one pound of grated cheese, bread crumbs, salt.

Mash the beans or put them through a meat grinder. Add the cheese and sufficient bread crumbs to make the mixture stiff enough to be formed into a roll. Bake in a moderate oven, basting occasionally with butter and water. Serve with tomato sauce. This dish may be flavored with onions, chopped and cooked in butter and water.

Baked Tacos With Cheese—Four eggs, one cupful or four ounces of grated cheese, one cupful of fine, stale bread crumbs, one-quarter teaspoonful salt, a few grains of cayenne pepper.

Break the eggs into a buttered baking dish or into ramekins and cook them in a hot oven until they begin to turn white around the edge. Sprinkle with the mixture of crumbs, cheese and seasonings. Brown in a very hot oven. In preparing this dish it is essential that the oven be very hot or the egg will be too much cooked by the time the cheese is brown. To avoid the same cooke cover the egg with white sauce before adding crumbs.

A second class consists of cheese soups and vegetables cooked with cheese.

Cheese and Vegetable Soup—Two cupfuls of stock, two tablespoonfuls of finely chopped carrots, one tablespoonful of chopped onion, a very little mace, two tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one and a half teaspoonfuls of salt, one cupful of scalded milk, one-fourth cup full of grated cheese.

Cook the vegetables a short time in one-half of the butter, add the stock and the mace, boiling 15 or 20 minutes. Strain and add the milk. Thicken with flour cooked in the remaining butter. Just before serving stir in the cheese and cook until it is melted.

Cheese With Potato Puffs—One cupful of mashed potatoes, one-quarter teaspoonful of salt, one egg, half teaspoonful of salt, half cupful of grated cheese.

Heat the potatoes and milk together until thoroughly mixed. Add the egg yolks and the cheese and season. Finally add the cheese. Bake in muffin tins in a slow oven 10 or 15 minutes.

A similar dish may be made by scooping out the inside of a baked potato and stuffing it with cheese as above. Fill the potato skin shell with the mixture, return to the oven and bake until a light brown.

A third class comprises such dishes as cheese salads and cheese sauce dishes.

Cheese Salad and Preserves—Roll cheese into balls, or cut into small slices of lettuce with French dressing. Serve with cream cheese and thick preparations of cornsize or other fruits preserved in honey or sugar. Cheese balls may be made that the seeds have been extracted by a hollow process, and filling them with soft cheese often found in market is a relatively expensive. There is a suggestion in this dish, however, for others which are much less costly. Butterfly biscuits, cottage cottage cheese served with lettuce or other green salad and a small amount of rich homemade preserves, is a combination, and much less expensive than a cheese, and also very appetizing.

Cuban Sandwiches—This sandwich has been served in Cuba as a light sandwich with cheese. It is usually made large as a loaf of bread, and is cut in slices as a loaf, and form, it may be made to such proportions as to supply a large number of sandwiches.

Cut the crusts from slices of bread, between two slices lay first lettuce with a little salad dressing or salt on it, then a slice of cold chicken and finally thin slices of dill pickles on a chopped pickle.

Cheese Wafers.—Spread grated cheese on thin crackers, heat in the oven until the cheese is melted, serve with soup or salad.

Cheese Relish.—Spread bread which has toasted or fried in deep fat with grated cheese, or with grated cheese and mixed with a little mustard, then heat in the oven until the cheese is melted. This may be served with salad, or as a relish to give flavor to some dish such as boiled rice or hominy, which has no very marked flavor.

Brown Betty With Cheese—Arrange in a deep earthenware baking dish, alternate layers of bread crumbs and sliced apples. Season with cinnamon, also a little clove if desired and a little salt. Pour over a mixture of warm true, and after all expenses were paid the owner had $41 to the good. In the spring, the rains came at the time when the trees were in bloom and Mr. Daley thinks the pollen in many of the blossoms was washed out. The tree is thirty-five years old. It has been accounted for as under cultivation, in pasture.

No farm is complete without an orchard. On the Snyder farm is an orchard of seven acres and in the orchard are 500 apple trees. There is not a coat caterpillar on any of the trees, either. The remaining dozen acres are covered with property consisting of an eleven-room house, a large barn with stone foundation and a basement, a tenant house of four rooms, a root cellar that will hold about 1,000 bushels of potatoes, a granary, a machinery shed, a two-story granary, two corn cribs that now are holding 3,000 bushels of corn, and other smaller farm buildings.

The soil on the Snyder farm is largely of clay and dark sand loam. Not so many years ago it was covered with a dense forest of hardwood trees.

Mr. Snyder has demonstrated just how profitable Wexford hardwood land can be made by properly clearing it and tilling the land thereafter.

He values his farm at $50 an acre, and this includes the 12 acres of uncleared land. So the value of the cleared land is considerably above that figure. The Snyder farm is only one of several 125,000 farms in Wexford county.

TEXT—"And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him." Genesis v:24.

Walking With God

By REV. L. W. CONNELL
Evangelist to the Deaf
Moody Bible Institute, Chicago

The fifth chapter of Genesis contains a list of men who reached respectable ages; yet, with one exception, it is written of each of them, "and he died." This man, who walked with God, and did not die, is one of the most attractive figures in Scripture.

He lived amid wicked people. Enoch's generation was teeming for the flood, and every imagination of man's heart was only evil continually. He "walked with God." He encourages us to wish than even under disadvantageous circumstances. Christ said to the church at Pergamos: "I know where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is: and thou holdest fast my name and hast not denied my faith." How wonderful! Christ speaks of saints in Caesar's household! and to know that Christ is lived at such a place and time that the Father could say, "This is my beloved son, in whom I am well pleased."

He lived in the twilight of revelation. There was as yet no Bible, no Christ, no Holy Ghost. How shall he rise up to condemn us!

He was married. He could have thought selfishly necessary to the highest holiness. But Enoch resisted the devil and really became a mother who declared she could not be a Christian unless she had children. Was Enoch less a Christian? But we are told—"Enoch walked with God after he begat Methuselah," and it is suggested that the coming of this little life into his home was the beginning of his heavenly conversation.

His Walk.

He walked by faith (Hebrews 11:5). There is no record of him having revelations more than we have who also "walk by faith." "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of God," and such a faith is basis enough for walking with God.

He pleased God (Hebrews 11:5). How indifferent this makes us to men's opinions! "It is a small thing with me that I am judged of man's judgment." How blessed to know we can bring joy to the heart of God and that we may "walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing" (Col. 1:10).

He warned the world. Jude tells us that Enoch prophesied, saying, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all. Those who walk with God are called to bear testimony against the world.

He pleased God, proved by his being caught up to heaven. "All right."

His Reward.

Translation! Heaven! Glory! Christ, our Lord, amen.

INTELLIGENT FARMING PAYS BIG PROFITS IN MICHIGAN

By H. J. DANIELS.

Every county in the state of Michigan has its "best farm." And always there are several who have reason for making the claim.

Ask anyone in the vicinity of Cadillac to name over the six most productive farms in Wexford county and that of Herbert Snyder would surely be in the list. It is located about two miles from the village of Boon.

The Snyder farm is an ideal farm. It consists of 440 acres. Three hired men and Mr. Snyder are required to farm these acres. They use three teams in doing the work.

The important thing about any farm and what gives it the name of being a good farm is the profit it pays.

Mr. Snyder has been farming these same 440 acres for quite a long time. His land produces from 150 to 300 bushels of potatoes to the acre. The average is 200. Last year he raised 8,000 bushels of potatoes on 40 acres. He sold them for 50 cents per bushel, or $4,000, an average of $100 per acre. Mr. Snyder has 40 acres in potatoes this year. He expects to realize another $4,000 on 1914 tubers.

An average yield of hay on the Snyder farm is two tons to the acre. Mr. Snyder has 110 acres in hay this year. He hopes to have 150 tons of hay when he finishes cutting the last crop. He brings the farmer from $10 to $15 per ton, an average of $12. Mr. Snyder expects to realize $1,800 on his crop for $4,000. He has equaled this figure in the past.

So $8,000 is not an unusual sum for the prosperous Wexford farmer to realize off his farm from sale of sale of potatoes. And only 215 acres, or less than half its farm, is in tubers and hay.

One hundred acres of the remaining 205 acres of land is in wood timber. This section is used for pasture purposes, and in it there are several fresh-water springs, making it an ideal feeding ground for the Snyder herd of horses and cattle. From the cattle he gets much income from the sale of milk and cream.

This year Mr. Snyder has 75 acres of his land in oats, 35 acres in wheat and 45 acres in oats, making a total of 145 acres of land in minor crops. Corn on the Snyder farm for the past 12 years has averaged about 105 crates to the acre and has sold at 35 cents per crate; wheat has averaged 25 bushels to the acre and has sold for an average of $1 per bushel; and oats have run 40 bushels to the acre and sold at from 40 to 50 cents per bushel, or an average of 45 cents.

At this figure Mr. Snyder's 1914 corn crop should bring him some $2,500; his wheat should sell for $800; and his oats for $900, making a total of close to $4,000 for the three minor crops. Mr. Snyder believes this figure is not too high, and at present his crops look better than this figure to him.

So he will be a disappointed man if he does not realize this sum for his hay, potatoes, oats, wheat and corn he raises this year.

Of the 440 acres a total of 460 have been cleared. Some of the stumps are still in pasture.

There is a considerable reduction in the acreage of wheat sown in Cass county this season, one of the main reasons being the unsatisfactory yield last year's crop by the fly, which was considerable. Farmers generally have farmers suffered a loss through winter killing, especially in the late-sown fields. This was true on the old Asa Kingsbury farm, where 147 acres have been planted to corn, and where some wheat was plowed up this spring. The wheat acreage was decreased this spring in consequence, although there are 600 acres in the farm and plenty of room for a wheat crop.

Harmon Cobile of Wayne township, who has proved himself a very successful farmer, planted 70 acres in corn, and practically all this will be required for the fattening of a drove of 200 hogs and pigs which are now being cared for on pasture and from the crop of last year, much of which is yet on hand. Mr. Cobile has a farm of 200 acres of good land, but he did not sow any wheat this year. He commenced in Wayne in a small way and gradually decreased his holdings by growing potatoes. Later he has found a good profit in raising and fattening swine, and he has as yet had no losses. He has greatly improved his farm, both in appearance and fertility, and he is set down as one of the successful young farmers of the county.

SOLVES SQUASH PROBLEM.

To have a fresh squash on the table on a cold winter's day with the appearance and flavor of the vegetable when it was picked from the garden is the problem which has been solved by D. W. Hawkings, a well-known fruit grower of Stevensville, Mich.

Mr. Hawkings experimented last season with the new breed of squash by growing them in the open and then placing them in a cool, dry place, so where does the frost not reach. Mr. Hawkings is not the first to have success in this way, but he is the first to have the cured standard.

Turning Under a Cereal Crop on a Farm in the Grand Traverse Peninsula.

Many farmers in the Grand Traverse peninsula region know the value of plowing under a heavy cereal crop for the benefit of the land, and it will do the soil. They recognize that what is lost from the crop returns this year will come back to them later in an increased crop, that the "bread cast upon the waters" today will return many days and in a most substantial manner.

The Grand Traverse practice nowadays to plow under a large field, getting nothing from the crop except what goes into the soil as a fertilizer, yet pays does a farmer regret the act.

LEGUMES ARE IN CLOSE COUNTY

With the sweet-potato variety common in the winter months, Hawkings proved a great success and in consequence Mr. Hawkings has enjoyed a vegetable with all the aromatic flavor of summer squash all through the winter months. The squash, when cured, decreased, increase was that many farmers suffered a loss through winter killing, especially in the late-sown

BEST FRUIT FARM IN THE UNITED STATES.

Merritt's Sweet Cherry Orchard in Manistee County.

"That the Neillie Whitney fruit farm, owned by James E. Merritt of Manistee, is beyond all question the finest individual fruit farm in the United States was the declaration a few days ago of L. C. Humphrey, representing the Graham and Morrison and Dufer Nurseries of Ithaca, N. Y., who commented favorably on the careful treatment Mr. Merritt gives his orchard and his faith in the future possibilities of fruit growing in the Manistee district.

Mr. Humphrey is looking for the best 1,000-acre tract in northwestern Michigan and is favorably impressed with the looks of the land around Manistee. He proposes to develop a large tract and then cut it up into small orchards on the plan followed by his company at Fort Myers, Fla. What Western Michigan needs, he says, is the development of orchards on a generous comprehensive scale.

The scene in the accompanying cut shows one of Mr. Merritt's orchards in the making. It is a sweet cherry orchard, between the rows of which crops are being grown until the trees are large enough to need all the sustenance of the soil. There are 40 acres in this particular tract.

ONE TREE PAYS $48.

A big Osborn cherry tree at Lopez Daisey's place near Ellsworth on the banks of O'Brien lake, produced 16 crates of fruit this summer. Last year 32 crates were picked off the tree, and after all expenses were paid the owner had $48 to the good. In the spring, the rains came at the time when the trees were in bloom and Mr. Daley thinks the pollen in many of the blossoms was washed out. The tree is thirty-five years old. It has three trunks and it is said the top of the tree covers a space as large as a small farm. Next year Mr. Daley will market the cherries, but he is in small way, similar to the plan followed by Mr. Humphrey, he expects to put 20 acres into orchard.

Keep Up the Income.

Ducks are great producers and they are also great growers, so where does the loss come in? A few ducks will help the income up to the 100 to the cutired standard.

Ground for Vegetables.

It is useless to try to grow vegetables upon ground that is sandy and barren. For these reasons a clay loam with a growth portion of sand is to be desired.

Study of Hardiness.

A study of the hardiness of fruit buds, flowers and seedlings from trees received less attention than many other phases of fruit growing.

PLAN BIG CATTLE RANCH.

One of the largest bug and caule ranches in Michigan is to be opened at Johannesburg, Mich., in a few days by F. L. Schlosser and Fred H. Dodd, who recently purchased the large W. H. Cook farm, two miles southeast of the town. Sixty acres of the ranch are already under cultivation and are planted to alfalfa and cowpeas, which will prove excellent food for the thoroughbred stock that will eventually take on the ranch.

By the height of the season the new owners expect to have over 100 Hereford and Aberdeen Angus cattle on the ranch. The cattle will be shipped in from Kansas and will be housed in one of bugs that will be made. Before the coming of fall a large silo will be erected on the farm to take care of the ensilage. Much of the crop of the farm not now cleared will be cleared this summer and will become a part of the stock farm.

Make Farmstead Attractive.

Too many farm front yards are used merely for storing implements. An old-fashioned flower garden, made up of showy, hardy flowers, will make the farmstead really attractive.

Silage Low in Protein.

Silage is very low in protein, in fact it is lower in protein than cut straw. It is valued because it is succulent and aids in the digestion of other feeds.

Ancient Cereal Beef Welcome.

Cultivation is a mighty concentrator, but if the ground is dry, don't run the cultivator, but let it alone. Keep the top soil stirred only.

EGGS BY MAIL NOW

Result of Experiments by Department of Agriculture.

System of Marketing That Offers Possibilities of Better Prices for Producer and Fresher Articles for the Consumer.

Washington—That eggs can be marketed successfully by parcel post and that this method frequently secures a better price for the producer and a fresher article for the consumer has now been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the experts in the United States department of agriculture. The department conducted tests that covered a period of five months. At the end of that period it came to the conclusion that the parcel post was of particular value to the man whose flock was too small or who lives too far from express service to permit him to ship his eggs in the regular commercial case which holds 30 dozen eggs.

In the course of these experiments the department shipped 5,131 eggs in 466 lots. Of these 327 or slightly less than 14 per cent were broken, but only 309 or slightly less than 2.5 per cent were absolutely wasted. The loss, though broken, could still be used. The percentage of breakage, moreover, will be greatly reduced if it is said when the employees of the post office become more accustomed to handling such fragile matter.

That the eggs should be properly packed is of course, of great, but it implies time, care and some expense for it is for reasons why an attempt should be made to market by parcel post only but the local market of eggs for last about will bring remunerative prices. Moreover, if the customer who is a family, is finds that any considerable proportion of his purchases is undesirable or even unattractive in appearance, he will not trouble to ask for deductions on that account but he will simply discontinue his orders. The producer, therefore, must see to it that all the eggs he sportman delivers are what he represents them to be.

This can only be done by candling them. Candling "The process of testing eggs by passing light through them so as to reveal the condition of the contents," is omitted by many producers who rely on care in collecting to eliminate all bad eggs. It is, however, impossible to avoid an occasional accident and candling is therefore advisable as an extra precaution. A simple outfit can be made out of a small metal lamp and a cardboard pasteboard box sufficiently large to be placed over the lamp, after the ends have been removed, without risk of fire. In order to supply air to the closed lamp, notches should be cut in the edge on which the box seats. A round hole in the end of the box at the level of the lamp flame and the candling done by holding each egg against this hole while the rest of the room is in darkness. The light from the lamp reveals the contents of the egg and those that show any defect can be rejected.

If possible only infertile eggs should be sent to market. Fertile eggs deteriorate rapidly in warm weather and are the cause of much loss. A brooding hen, or the post or accidental exposure to a high temperature may start incubation and cause the egg to spoil and before the shipper's knowledge. It is advisable, therefore, to retain the fertile eggs for home use or dispose of them in some other way than through the parcel post. This is done by the method eggs. Eggs should never be washed when intended for high-class trade, as the process removes a natural mucilaginous coating and leaves the pores of the shell.

After this thorough elimination of the unfit the eggs that remain should be carefully packed in a container of corrugated pasteboard, metal, wood or any suitable material. The post office regulations require this container to be so wrapped that nothing can escape. The eggs should be packed in addition to be wrapped separately with soft material, such as excelsior, wood wool, and paper. Care must be taken that the eggs do not rub against one another or against the sides of the container. Before the eggs are placed in the container they should be wrapped separately in tissue paper, and the department of agriculture recommends that the eggs be stamped to decide which is the best. Instead they refer to the reports of the various state experiment stations which have available information on this question.

In packing eggs it is well to set them as far as is practical according to size and color and to keep for home use those which are irregular in shape, unusually large or thin-shelled. Containers that have been badly stained by broken eggs should be replaced by new ones and the packages wrapped as soon as possible. In short every effort should be made to deliver as attractive a package as possible into the hands of the customer. The extra expense will be little and the returns in increased trade great.

The larger the shipments that the producer can arrange to make, the more economical the cost of marketing. Within the first and second zones of the postal service, a package costs five cents for the first pound and twenty cents for each additional pound. Ordinarily eggs weigh about one and one-half pounds a dozen. Allowing for the additional weight of the wrapping and container, would make a package of a dozen eggs weigh between two and three pounds. ITCHED AND BURNED

Silversond, Mich.—"My baby was about six months old when he first began to break out with little pimples on his head and face. Then they took on a red and keep getting worse until his head and face is a raging mass of eczema and wound run and stream from it and his face also. His whole body was affected. They were little white pimples which itched and burned something terrible. He could hardly seemed to irritate him and it was almost impossible for him to sleep at night. They also disfigured him as they were on his face.

"We tried medicine but without success. The trouble must have lasted three or four weeks when a friend advised us to try the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I would bathe him with warm water and then he could stand and Cuticura Soap, then apply the Cuticura Ointment. We found that in three that I did this it seemed to relieve him so he slept quite well and did not scratch. The trouble was completely healed." (Signed) Mrs. L. White, Jan. 29, 1914.

The Same Thing.

Vincent Astor, at a dinner in New York, said of the French aviation shows that have cropped up many times in the country in pioneer:

"I heard a story about one of these shows. A beguiling girl had purchased it in the Rue de Paix with her mother's knowledge, and initiated it to her. It the evening it came home, at Armenonville for dinner and at the opera afterwards for the Ruelle ballet. Her mother, however, promised the girl, in her headstrong way, declared:

"'I'll wear that gown or nothing.'

"Nothing it was and a faint nothing, her mother answered.

"'Well, it comes to about the same thing.'"

That Whiff of Violets.

"My! what a flowery whiff! That haberdasher must have been really spaced in violets," exclaimed one girl to another who had been passing from its folds a fragrant square of linen. "Violets and only violets, my dear," was the answer, "but bolted in orris water. The effect is the same."

"Flirtes show that imports of foodstuffs in their natural condition included food animals, increased from $17,182,237, in the half year ended with March, 1913, to $143,421,836 during the corresponding period this year, and that imports of foodstuffs, partly or wholly prepared for use in the same period, increased from $95,764,841 to $100,967,778. The increase in importations of all food products for the period named approximated more than thirty million dollars, or an increase of $5,000,000 a month.

"Payers of exports are even more striking. Of crude foodstuffs, exports fell off more than fifty per cent, while prepared foodstuffs increased. Exports of crude foodstuffs fell from $84,892,439 in the six months period of 1913 to $55,483,797 in the corresponding period this year, and manufactured products from $180,007,622 to $157,022,609.

Total articles showing largest increases in importations were beef, fish, cotton, wheat, tea, macaroni, fruits, molasses and edible oils.

In a little room of the Smithsonian Institution a woman is reconstructing the tattered remnants of the identical Revolutionary Historical Flag Being Restored. Hand stitches and bright stars" inspired Francis scout Key during the bombardment of Fort McHenry, near Baltimore, on the morning of Sept. 14, 1814. So new fabric will be used; it will be the same texture woven into it by the women of Baltimore in the outbreak of the second war with England.

This flag has been an object of the National Museum and the Smithsonian Institute since 1907. It became the property of the museum only within the past few months. Not long ago it was reported to Dr. C. H. Newell, administrative assistant of the Smithsonian, that unless some thing was done to repair the flag it would have to be withdrawn from exhibition. The hole was so rotted that it would scarcely bear handling. Mr. Newell heard of Mrs. Amelia Fowler, who makes a specialty of repairing old flags and intrusted the task to her.

TELLS OF DROWNING ELEPHANTS

"Did you ever hear the terrorified trumpeting of a herd of drowning elephants?" asked W. J. Williams of Paris, Ind., at the Willard. "If you never heard the piteous cries of dying beasts, you have escaped one of the most heartrending experiences that ever comes to civilized man. I was in Peru during the flood of 1913, when the Wabash river rose to unknown heights, causing tremendous destruction of property. Peru is the winter headquarters of the Wallace and Hassenbach circus, and when it was found that the water was coming higher than had ever been known before, the fourteen elephants in the circus were unchained and let go to take care of themselves. Three of them managed to reach a small mound where they stood in the water with only their heads above it until the end of the flood, but the other eleven were drowned.

"With the water rushing through the streets, and the people of the city marooned in the second stories of the houses, the elephants swam around for hours, trumpeting in terror and stealing their trunks into the open windows of the houses in their efforts to find some spot of safety. They cried like children and one could almost understand their language as they pleaded for the help which could not be given them, for not one of them could be taken in through a door or window out of the flood. They acted more like human beings than beasts, and it was almost as difficult to see them go down under the muddy waters, one by one, as it was to see a human being wasted from a roof.

"I shall never forget their dying cries as they sought the safety which could not be found in the muddy waters of the flood, covering one-third of the earth was submerged.

"Back in the late circus menagerie, however, there was even a more tragic scene. When the water came up into the cages of the animals they all became frantic from fear.

"Lions and tigers roared and dashed themselves against the bars of their cages till it was feared they would escape and swim to places of safety, and the bears were almost crazed by the howling of the wolves.

"Tom bars were bent by the beasts in their fury and as the water rose higher their terror and their strength increased. When it was seen that nothing could be done to save the animals in the city were being endangered, the manager of the show went from cage to cage with a rifle and shot one after another of John Thackeray, Traveling Salesman, Finds War Cry Spreading Through 5th.

"Scott-for Congress."

The slogan is spreading like wild fire through the eleventh congressional district and is going particularly big in the upper peninsula according to John Thackery, traveling salesman for Goodyear Bros. & Co. of Kalamazoo, who has been making the territory of northern Michigan for years.

Mr. Thackery's testimony is added to that of many other persons who have traveled through the district and have found the same sentiment for Mr. Scott, even at points farthest from his home city.

Mr. Thackeray travels in every county in the eleventh district and visits all the banks, county and city offices and private offices in the towns he makes. His long experience in the district gives him a wide acquaintance and an opportunity to sound sentiment on such matters as Mr. Scott's campaign.

One in the Upper Peninsula

The malicious and willfully adverting out of Mr. Baylins' campaign in the upper peninsula is being run in the Escanaba Journal.

This is the same editor who was convicted of slander upon the complaint of Chas. S. Osborn four years ago.

The Journal is the same paper that published the Hampton interview, in which the vote of Charlevoix county was pledged to Baylins.

Be sure to invite someone to the Chautauqua and your friends a good time.

To The Republican Voters of Charlevoix County

I am a candidate for the nomination for Sheriff on the republican ticket. I have lived in Charlevoix county more than thirty years; part of that time in Charlevoix.

I have for many years been in business in Boyne City, and this year my taxes were $900.

My business and personal record is well known and will bear the closest scrutiny. I have always been a republican and voted the republican ticket straight.

I respectfully solicit the votes of the republican voters of Charlevoix county at the August primaries

JOHN H. LEWIS.

BABIES ARE COMING BACK INTO STYLE

For a good many years babies have not been receiving the attention they deserve. We have been reading about pets like lap dogs, Angora cats, and trained canaries. We have heard that women of fashion who set the pace for other women to follow, have been going in for all sorts of records, golf, tennis, swimming, bridge, etc. But nobody has been talking much about a record in raising healthy babies.

Then suddenly, people discovered that neglecting babies was a bad thing for the nation. Social workers began to organize Mothers' Clubs. Mothers' Congresses were held, but it remained for the Women's Home Companion to recognize the importance of making babies fashionable. It organized the Better Babies Bureau, whose object is to spread the Better Babies Contests idea all over the country. Last year one hundred thousand babies were examined, and are better babies today because their mothers learned something of the Better Babies idea at these contests.

Why not be in style and enter your children,—from six months to three years old—in the contest at Bay View, July 23 to 26. In addition to the satisfaction of having your baby examined, you will receive literature of interest to you as a parent. There will be a Better Babies Health Exhibit with charts, pictures, bulletins, and informal talks on the care of the child.

If you have no baby, see the contest anyway. Tell you neighbors about it.

We read that Michigan spent over $100,000 more during the past year in the support and care of the feeble minded than the entire expense of maintaining the University of Michigan for the same period. A surprising statement made by State Treasurer Haarer in his annual report. We've got some of them here who have thus far been inexpensive to the State. They are mixed up in Congressional politics to a degree that calls for benevolent interposition before they lapse into ultimate degeneracy.

Grand Traverse is holding the attention of the whole country at present on account of the bumper cherry crop that is now being harvested. So far this season there have been shipped from Traverse City alone forty-six carloads of cherries and the season has just begun. The demand for the fruit in the cities is unlimited and the product in demand than that of any other section because of the extra size and flavor of the fruit. Growers are taking better care of their orchards than they did in the past and as a result are getting far better results from the trees. Grand Traverse is the natural habitat of the cherry and too much emphasis cannot be laid upon the fact. The cherry orchards are one of the greatest assets of the region and with the thousands of young trees that are annually coming into bearing a bright future is ahead of the region. Better shipping facilities are being provided every year so that the marketing problem is steadily simplified over what it was last season and the following years will see still further increase in the annual crop. The cherry is a fruit that is always in demand and when the facilities for distribution are right there is no danger of growing too many for the market.

A CHARMING ENTERTAINMENT

The most unique amusement event of the season will be the Dolls' Opera and play of "Cinderella" to be given at the Inn the evening of August 5th, under the direction of the Missis Mixter.

These two charming ladies are from Philadelphia, and are nieces of Lieut.-General John E. Chaffee, the hero of the Spanish and Philippine war.

The unique character of the play will appeal to all, and the opera is given entirely by dolls dressed to represent such grand opera stars as Mary Garden, Maggie Teyte, Henri Scott and Renee Gallo. These wonderful dolls dance, sing and act on a good sized stage.

To those who have read that fairy tale—"Cinderella," the entertainment will especially appeal. The opera is divided into four acts, and embraces every feature of the famous story of the crystal slipper.

The Misses Mixter have appeared in all of the Eastern cities, Canada and the Middle West, where their patronesses have included the most prominent society ladies.

Somebody does. If you are letting it all slip away from you, a certain portion of it is being banked by the various people to whom you pay it. This is hardly fair to yourself; after you work for your money it will repay the compliment by working for you if you will but give it the opportunity.

THE CHARLEVOIX COUNTY FAIR

Owing to wise and conservative business management in the past the Charlevoix County Fair Association is now approaching its "Thirteenth Annual" Exhibition with every prospect of success.

Up-to-date buildings and facilities now guarantee the proper display and protection of the largest and finest agricultural exhibit ever shown in Northern Michigan. It is expected that the largely increased premiums offered for Cattle, Swine and Sheep will greatly strengthen the exhibit in those departments, and already several of our best stock-men have promised to compete.

The new Speed Committee will endeavor to present the races in a manner both pleasing and convenient to all interested in this popular sport.

Regarding special free attractions the Executive Committee have sought to avoid as much as possible the uncertainty and disappointment that frequently attend such acts as aeroplane flights, balloon ascensions, etc., and secure some first-class attractions that would be certain to perform under ordinary conditions. This far three first-class attractions to be given in connection with the Races have been secured.

Lionel Lettaire's Mammoth Spiral Tower Exhibition in which Mr. LeGare besides performing other difficult feats, ascends and descends a mammoth 72-foot tower by propelling a 26 inch ball with his feet on a narrow track with perfect smooth ease. This is an attraction of state fair magnitude, and is endorsed by the highest authorities as one of the greatest equilibristic feats of the age.

Ray Dalton, performs many difficult feats in fancy pistol and rifle shooting, firing three weapons hitting the target simultaneously, etc. A ten thousand dollar challenge act.

Company "X" an independent Military Company, commanded by Captain Henry L. Winters, a Spanish War veteran, and Lieuts. Spring, and Baleby will camp on the fair grounds during the fair, and give an exhibition daily of the highest order. This company is comprised of sixty men fully uniformed, officered, equipped, and has creditably passed State inspection. Its concluding exhibition on the last day of the fair will consist of a "Great Sham Battle." Several thousand rounds of ammunition will be used in this extraordinary feature illustrating complete military maneuvers of modern warfare. This feature alone should be worth many times the price of admission to the entire fair.

The Order of Patrons of Husbandry have selected Wednesday, Sept. 9th as their "Grange Day" and Hon. John C. Kirchham, Worthy Master of Michigan State Grange will be present to deliver an address. A prize is offered to the Grange registering the largest per cent attendance on this day. Also the heaviest, tallest, shortest, and the oldest, will be suitably rewarded. Patrons will register at the Grange headquarters.

School Day, Thursday, Sept. 10th, will fully demonstrate the efficiency and progress of our public schools. The new Educational and Fine Arts building will contain an exhibit worthy of careful inspection by every thoughtful citizen.

It is aimed to make every day of our County Fair a "Big Day" and all that is needed to make our next County Fair a grand success, is the good will, active support and attendance of all good citizens. The management is making an honest effort to please you. Do your part. Throw away your hammer and hop a horn. Quit knocking and boost, and our County Fair in the broadest sense will continue to be all that it should be—an institution of profit and delight—the great humanizing event of the year.

THE MEAT IN THE COCOANUT

At this writing there is nothing before the people of Charlevoix county in the matter of local option. The people have twice decided by their ballots that they do not want the saloons. In the decision of this question the Sentinel has twice fought its best for local option—or local prohibition.

There are abundant evidences that certain local option workers are injecting this question into certain other politics, thereby rendering it not any support to a most unjust crusade against a certain republican candidate for a high office.

Well and good. But if this amalgamation of the saloon-and-local-option fad and the local option managers in this city continues, this will be the result: If the local option question again is submitted, the publisher of this paper will cast his vote against the saloons, and in one preliminary editorial give the reasons for so doing, in as emphatic words as he can command. Then he guess will be shot so far as any further support of the cause is concerned.

This is not intended as a threat. It simply means that the underhanded and dishonorable methods practiced by some of these people calls for retaliation, and we are here to retaliate.

"If this be treason, make the most of it."

Chas. Jefferies has withdrawn from the field as a candidate for sheriff, and is "plugging" for Novak.

The Kellogg-Haines Singing Party, Who Are to Appear at Our Chautauqua

THERE are five in the Kellogg-Haines Singing Party, including a pianist. Miss Imogene Gross, the soprano, has been soloist in several of the large churches of St. Louis. She was a pupil of Miss Stella Kellogg-Haines, for whom the Singing Party was originally named.

Miss Abba Montague, the contralto, studied for two years under the well known Professor McBurney, Chicago, and was for a time soloist of the big Hyde Park Baptist Church in that city. She is a graduate of the Chicago University with an A. B. degree.

John Eichenberger, tenor, was soloist in several of the best paid church choirs in St. Louis, has had dramatical experience and was coached with the best teachers in this country.

INCREASE IS REPORTED IN FEMALE WORKERS.

Census Bureau Shows Gain of Nearly 9 Per Cent From 1880 to 1910.

The proportion of gainful workers in the female population of the United States ten years of age and over increased from 14.7 to 18.8 per cent from 1880 to 1910, according to a report on occupations which has just been published by Director William J. Harris of the bureau of the census, department of commerce. In the same time the proportion of the male population ten years of age and over gainfully occupied increased from 78.7 per cent to 81.3 per cent.

The proportion of the whole population ten years of age and over engaged in gainful occupations has risen from 47.3 per cent in 1890 to 52.3 per cent in 1910, the increase being much rapid from 1880 to 1890 and most rapid from 1890 to 1910.

Whether or not the "feminist movement" of recent years has anything to do with the gain is not stated in the report, but the fact remains that the women of the country have increased their means of gainful earnings nearly 9 per cent during the time taken in by the census, and that during the same period the men have made a gain of only a little more than 3 per cent.

Of course this is in some degree explained by the fact that the proportion of men engaged in gainful occupations is naturally a large one, and the positive increase cannot be great in the ratio. However that may be, the fact remains that the women of the country, according to the figures of the report, are making larger inroads in the places where "gainful" occupations are to be had, and that the proportion of unoccupied females is decreasing each year.

There were 20,011,701 males engaged in gainful occupations in continental United States in 1910, as compared with 15,757,397 females. Of all the report, "of a total of 38,167,336 persons engaged in all occupations in 1910, 24.6 per cent were males and 21.2 per cent were females."

Barnyard Ladies.

Cackle-cackle the hens
The noisy ones but the wise,
Hey! Hey! Who has brought a wig,
And all the fellow in?

She says, "I'm vice president,"
Cackle the hen to her mate,
With all the harmony for Which she is famed.

The rooster, noisy, proud
Cocks his head to one side
Why shouldn't you, my dear
Have a president and wife?

Yes, yes,
Why not, why not, he thinks
Though it's funny, I declare
When she hasn't laid an egg.

And the hens, and barnyard ladies
When you offer him some hay,
Now, it doesn't seem to cluck
You should cast a wig, my dear.

Look to me as though the joke
Was on the other barnyard fowl.

GOOD ROADS BILL

Given to Senate Has the Approval of the Committee

Senator Bryan's good roads bill, already passed by the house, has been reported to the senate. The measure had received the approval of the senate committee on postoffices and post roads.

Under the terms of the Bryan bill the federal government would issue fifty-year three per cent bonds to the amount of $500,000,000, in lots of $100,000,000 each for five years. Before states could participate in the funds they would be required to issue an equal amount of four per cent bonds, which, when deposited in the treasury department, would be exchanged for cash. The one per cent difference would make up a sinking fund to aid the states in retiring the bonds.

Creation of a federal highway commission to supervise the expenditure of highway funds is a feature of the Bryan bill. The commission would be composed of the chairmen and members of the senate and house committees on roads, the director of the office of public roads and a United States army engineer.

A MATTER OF REGRET

No one can regret more than does the editor of this paper that rancor should have developed in a phase of the present primary campaign. So far as the candidates in this controversy are concerned not one word of disrespect or disparagement of Mr. Bayliss has appeared in the editorial columns of the Sentinel.

We started out in this congressional primary campaign on the assumption that both candidates were worthy and capable men. We have not deviated from those premises. But the small local coterie of smaller politicians at once opened a personal campaign of abuse against Senator Scott.

We know Frank Scott. We regard him as a personal friend. We know him to be a gentleman—with brains, so honest, clean-handed and clean-headed that we will fight for himself, and therefore, we are in the fight to the finish.

Mr. Scott is, geographically, the logical candidate for Charlevoix county to support. He has not been selected by the legislature from this senatorial district, and was, in his last term, elected to preside over the senate in the absence of the lieutenant-governor. There is not a spot on his record.

And now, that this local raid upon him has resulted in the discomfiture of the unscrupulous raiders, they fall back upon slurs and insinuation against Mr. Scott's personal character. This will avail them nothing. The source of these calumnies, would carry with it a sufficient refutation.

Frank D. Scott will carry Charlevoix county in the primaries; he will carry the district, and will be elected to congress in November.

WHAT ABOUT ALL THIS PEACE PALAVER?

During the past five years we have heard more talk about world peace than we have heard in the past 50 years. At present generation. A palace of peace was built at The Hague; peace societies have sprung into existence; peace treaties have been made with great earnestness and solemnity, and kings and Emperors have kissed each other on both cheeks and the back of the neck.

Yet more battle ships are being built than ever. Austria and Servia are on the brink of war, which cannot fail to embroil some of the great powers; Turkey and Greece are making grimaces at each other; Ulster is armed to resist home rule and civil war is brained seems likely; the United States is knocking at Santo Domingo, and peace in Mexico is far from certain.

"So runs the world away."

The announcement of the withdrawal of W. T. McManus, Jr., of Petoskey, from the Eleventh district congressional race was made Friday. Francis T. McDonald, of Sault Ste. Marie, who withdrew in favor of Mr. McManus, probably will resume his campaign. He is a democrat, but he is a good chap.

Bite Your Child Worms!

Most children do. A coated, furred tongue; strong breath; stomach pains; circles under eyes; pale shallow complexion; nervous, fretful; grinding of teeth; tossing in sleep; peculiar dreams; many one of these indicate child has worms. Get a box of Kickapoo Worm Killer at once. It kills the worms—the cause of your child's condition. Its laxative and tonic nature is expert the worms. Supplied in candy form. Easy for children to take. 25c. Recommended by F. G. Hines & Co.

Socialist Street Meeting

MICHIGAN STATE FARM BOYS' CAMP

State Y. M. C. A. Camp, Torch Lake, August 19-29, 1914

Agriculture is recognized as the fundamental occupation of mankind. It holds true even in our industrial age. It is the one great industry that trains the boy in its conduct. It is the one great industry that has furnished the largest share of raw material for leadership of the world's affairs. It has often wrecked its own resources by pointing its youth to other professions for a successful career.

Recognizing that additional emphasis should be given not only to agriculture as a profession, but to the opportunities open to boys along educational, social and religious lines as revealed by inquiry among the leaders of rural organizations of Michigan, the State Y. M. C. A. Committee have decided to hold a special six days camp for farm boys, August 19-29.

The purpose of this camp is to bring together representative farm boys from all part of the state to discuss problems of rural life and the ideals of the movement, at the same time to prepare for greater usefulness in their own communities.

In addition to the regular camp routine and recreational activities, two hours daily will be given to the consideration of special farm topics. Some of the subjects to be discussed will be soil, corn, potato raising, live stock and horticulture. Farm experts will have charge of these rural discussions and several men of national reputation have been asked to address the boys.

The following is practically the daily program that will be followed during the ten days: 6:30 a. m., rising-exhalts and morning exercises; 7:00 a. m., breakfast; 7:30 a. m., camp duties; 8:15 a. m., group bible study; 9:30 a. m., discussion of agricultural subjects; 1:30 a. m., swimming; 12:00, noon, dinner; 1:00 p. m., Leaders' meeting and rest hour; 2:00 p. m., recreation, base ball, tennis, etc.; 4:00 p. m., swimming; 5:00 p. m., camp duties; 6:00 p. m., supper; 7:00 p. m., boat crew practice; 8:00 p. m., camp fire discussions of agricultural subjects; 9:00 p. m., taps.

The camp will be held at Hayes-Wauki-Ha camp for boys, one of the best equipped camps in the country, conducted by the State Y. M. C. A. Committee. The camp on Torch Lake is located just east of Grand Traverse Bay. A most delightful and healthful camp, away from resort influences. The natural surroundings are ideal to make the camp ideal. The camp is reached via Central Lake, the nearest town, four miles from camp, on the Grand Rapids railroad.

The expenses will be within the reach of all and particularly for those who pay living in Charlevoix county. A program fee of two dollars will be required of each boy. This will in part pay the expenses of the program. Board, use

CIVILIZING THE FILIPINO

ROSARIO, THE PHILIPPINE ASSISTANT, WAS TAUGHT

IN AGREEMENT with the somewhat tardiness, Mr. Meredith Uncle Sam believes that "civilized man cannot live without cocks," and in putting that belief into demonstration in handling the educational problems of the Philippines.

The Filipino, to be sure, had a civilization and culture prior to the American occupation, but the civilization was not of high standard. And after several years of close study of the needs and possibilities of our resident little brown foster brothers of the far eastern Islands domestic science has been deemed the surest foundation upon which to build.

To begin with, the home and its needs has been accepted by educators as the best process of engrafting continental civilization, education and culture on the stunted, half-wild growth which centuries of Spanish rule left behind. It was the Filipino himself who pointed out the way for the solving of his own personal equation. Primitive as his home life had been he had been living up to the best he knew. When something better was before him he was prompt to see the advantages of the newer way.

The domestic science of the Filipino was not science at all; it was only a crude makeshift handed down to him from his ancestors. His home was little better than a shack, very small and destitute of furnishings. His diet was so restricted that the idea of such a thing as the art of cookery had never occurred to him.

His clothing was little—or nothing.

With the coming of the American and his higher standard of civilization the Filipino, especially the younger generation, saw life from a new angle. He came to the realization that there is more in life than the mere business of living. He found that there is work to do, that he must do his share toward raising the standards of succeeding generations; that he had his allotted task in the bringing of the civilization of his country to a higher level.

The first evidence of this awakening in the Filipino was the change in his method of life. Gone was the open fire over which swung a single pot on a tripod. Gone is the ancient habit of an entire family, including the pigs and the rest of the four-footed animals, eating from a common dish. Gone also are the primitive sleeping arrangements.

To be sure the change was by evolution rather than by revolution, but the progress was sufficiently rapid and marked to compel the attention of the American educators who had gone across seas to teach these primitive folk new things. They had gone with a notion that the Filipino could be taught the same things and by the same methods that form the educational system in California and New York, Texas and the Dakotas.

They found, however, that physical environment and previous social experience had bred in the Filipino racial characteristics vastly different from our own and made of him a separate educational problem.

The Filipino was not especially interested in "whetting and he achieved mental training, but he was ambitious, cleverly imitative and keenly alert to the material comforts and comforts of civilization which he glimpsed for the first time when the American came and conquered. And for all his weaknesses he was willing and eager and anxious to work for these things which so suddenly he had come to desire—these tangible and outward signs of a higher civilization.

So it was that domestic science and vocational training became an integral part of the educational system of the Philippines. In a battalion school of agriculture, where pupils are voluntarily in school—there is no compulsory education in the islands. Primary English education is open to all and is incidental to the domestic science and vocational courses.

The Filipino knew what he wanted and he got it and he is rather as severe as the north wind. Stated would imagine we would be if ever we did get what we want.

One of the most potent factors in making the Filipino, not into an imitation good American, but into a good, faithful and useful citizen of his own native archipelago, has been the School of Household Industries in Manila. Here already from all the islands of the group, in ever increasing numbers, young Filipinos are instructed in domestic science and economy. In these young women are taught the more important if less remunerative vocations of the Filipino housewife and mother.

The course in housekeeping and household arts, one of the most important and most widely studied of the several offered by the school gives the young women a basic education in the three R's, three full years study being devoted to reading, writing, arithmetic and hygiene. In the homemaker's course they study hygiene, home sanitation, physiology, cooking and the care of infants.

A short course in nursing is given, and a full nurse's course is included among the vocational courses. Dressmaking, lace making, embroidery, hat making and weaving are among the other branches included in the vocational school and optional in the homemaker's course.

Much as the Filipino needed education along all lines in nothing was his need so great as in the first principles of sanitation. When the American came the natives, even in the larger cities, knew nothing of sanitation, household or otherwise. It had not been taught the Filipino by his Spanish rulers, who practised the theory that the more filth the more glory to God and fanatic costumes have been discarded for simple checked gingham frocks under all enveloping white linen aprons.

In sharp contrast to these cooking school girls are the young women who are studying to be those other branches and clinging religiously to the gaily flowered skirts, tight at the hips, flowing away to voluminous breadth and great train at the feet, and surmounted by the queer little crisp cotton jackets, for all the world like badly cut kimonos and bonehing up about the neck in an ungraceful fashion, always suggesting hump shoulders.

To make beautiful lace and fine embroidery seems to be an almost natural art with the Filipino girls, an inherent aptitude which is undoubtedly from the uncounted generations of lace makers before them. The strong, supple and dexterously slender brown fingers are steady as iron. The dark eyes are not tired by the latest, tedious patterns which would mean wreck of nerves and vision of women less patient and heavily endowed.

Lace making and embroidery were not introduced by American teachers, but were brought to the islands centuries ago by the Spaniards. Centuries ago the lace making and embroidery were taught in the convent schools as early as 1650, and Botana in the early eighteenth century noted that "the girls easily imitate the laces and embroidery of Europe" and that they perform "such work fairly well in a little time."

The foundation being laid, it was an opportunity quickly seized by the American educators and while the instruction under convent teaching necessarily was restricted to a comparatively small number, it is the hope of the instructors of these days that needlecraft speedily shall become of universal knowledge among Filipino women. Also it is hoped that through their aptitude for embroidery and lace making a market may be opened up for them a steadily remunerative occupation.

In the nurse's training work also the idea has been to provide the young women with remunerative work, but the beginnings in this direction were in the face of stubborn prejudice and opposition. The natives were extremely suspicious of clinics and hospitals and it was quite beyond comprehension that any young woman of Christian and good caste should be willing to undergo a nurse's experience.

A cupsule of enlightenment had to be carried on before it was possible to establish nursing classes. But the readily adaptable Filipino, once convinced that the finest of young women became nurses among more advanced and enlightened people, speedily abandoned her past notions. The out of the wind is now accounted in the opposite direction and the vocation of trained nurse has so caught popular fancy that the number of applicants for training far exceeds than the capacity of the training school.

In bakery and rug weaving another profitable line has been opened for women, and by rare good fortune it happens that the islands produce in lavish quantities all of the required materials, which with their commercial values unknown hitherto were wasted. In the Spanish days the Filipino knew no income by reason of the prevalent idea that the more he produced the more he would have died for the Spanish tyrant who ruled over him. But to do this it was necessary that I should be visibly present with the electric influence of my looks, my words, my voice. Who cares for me now, removed as I am from the active scenes of life and from the presence of men? Who would now die for me? Christ alone across the chasm of eighteen centuries makes a demand which is beyond all others difficult to satisfy. He asks for the human heart. He demands it unconditionally, and forthwith his demand is granted. Wonderful! In defiance of time and space the soul of man, with all its powers and faculties becomes an association to the empire of Christ. This phenomenon is unaccountable; it is altogether beyond the scope of man's creative powers. Time, the great destroyer, is powerless to extinguish this sacred flame. This is what strikes me most. This is what proves to me quite convincingly that Jesus Christ is God."

LACK OF LOVE THE BASEST APOSTASY.

(By THEODORE KEMP, Ld. D., President Illinois Wesleyan University.)

"There is no book like the Bible for interest, wisdom and truth. Read the Bible.

In the parable of the Good Samaritan the priest returning from worship at the temple avoided his wounded neighbor, and passed by on the other side. He perhaps thought it was too late to have the influence of a beneficial service at the temple dissipated by the groans of a dust begrimed blood-stained man by the way. The rebbes might yet be near, and it would be dangerous to stop. One who serves the temple has no time to listen to the plaints of men. No Levite dare heed the curiosity and perhaps a brief spasm of pity. Grew near, looked and passed by. To tarry and help would mean loss of time, a disagreeable task, and perhaps cost money.

The unorthodox Samaritan may be stone cold but he is long on soloist. He has duty to pay, honor to win, his duty to man. His religion has taught him the very of service to humanity.

The Priest and Levite thought they could be religious without consecration or sympathy for men. Christ taught men to exhibit their faith in God by a spirit of helpfulness to mankind. God cannot be truly worshiped when men are neglected. One cannot love God and despise his neighbor. No amount of worship on Sunday will atone for lack of justice and compassion toward men for the rest of the week. By the standards of the priest and Levite the Samaritan was unorthodox. But by Christ's standard his deeds were sublime and theirs were despicable. The worst heresy is not that of the heart and not of the head. The basest apostasy consists in lack of love.

One of the most eloquent men of his time, Ruskin, was a man of one of the hardest workers in behalf of those who suffered most from the yoke upon us shall find rest unto our souls.

I heard the voice of Jesus say,
"Come unto me and rest;
Lay down, thou weary one, lay down
Thy head upon my breast."
I came to Jesus as I was—
Weary, and heavy-laden,
I found in him a resting place,
And he has made me glad.

Refreshment, refreshment, rest. A great hope for our great land. Is there still be these things for us. Who can give them but? The solution of the mystery is in the Lord Jesus Christ. Thank God there is a man able to satisfy and to give the world rest. Jesus Christ Jesus, our brother, touched with a feeling of our infirmities.

NAPOLEON'S ESTIMATE OF CHRIST

(By His Eminence JAMES CARDINAL GIBBONS.)

"Nobody ever outgrows Scripture; the book widens and deepens with our years."—Charles H. Spurgeon.

The first Napoleon was not a theologian; but he was a great man and a profound observer whose vast experience had enabled him to judge what forces were necessary to produce a lasting effect on mankind. When chained to the rock of St. Helena he had ample leisure to measure the greatness of men and to estimate them according to their true value. Cut off in a conversation with Montchenon he put the question to him: "Who was Jesus Christ?" Montchenon having declined to answer, Napoleon proceeded: "I will tell you. Alexander, Caesar, Charlemagne and myself have founded great empires. But our empires were founded on force. Jesus alone founded his empire on love, and to this day millions would die for him. I know I understand something of human nature, and I tell you, all these were men, and I am a man. Jesus Christ was more than man. I have inspired multitudes with a devotion so enthusiastic that they would have died for me. But to do this it was necessary that I should be visibly present with the electric influence of my looks, my words, my voice. Who cares for me now, removed as I am from the active scenes of life and from the presence of men? Who would now die for me? The Three R's in Christ

By Rev. PARLEY E. ZARTMANN
Secretary of Extension Department
Moody Bible Institute, Chicago

TEXT—"And a man shall be as a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as streams of water in a dry place; as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." Isaiah 32:2.

At once the exquisite beauty of the imagery, the pathos and the peace of the verse, compel attention and exert a charm. The picture is carven in its original setting, but it is quite in order in its outlines, and every man understands it, though he may not know its truth from his own experience. Here we have three figures of speech, three classes of needs, and three promises to meet these diverse aspects of our need—The three R's in Christ.

Refuge

"A man shall be as a hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest." Without question every man knows the meaning of that, and even in our western lands we have felt storm-clutters and cyclone-caves, for the day of salvation is coming, and there is great need for a place of safety.

We live as exposed and defenseless life, subject to greater storms than sweep our prairies, and more to be feared than the cold, wild winds which that rages in the North. We are exposed to the summits of affliction, the terrors of a troubled conscience, the necessity of divine judgment if we have lived in sin. You may flatter yourself, but you have not lived long without learning how defenseless you are. Has there not been a day when you sought for shelter—a hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest? The storms may sweep, but God is a refuge for all who will flee to him. Where do you go? Think of that caravan in the desert as the fierce howling storm rages upon it; how it presses forward to the distant shelter. Think of Christ as your hiding place. "The Lord's our rock, in him we hide—a shelter in the time of storm."

Refreshment.

"As streams of water in a dry place." The desert is not only without shelter, it is without water; and the path of the caravan is strewn with the bones of those who died for lack of water. What a lack of refreshment there is in the world, and how many perish for lack of the water of life!

Men seek refreshment in so many ways and so many false places, and they find that the world really has nothing to meet their deepest need. It cannot satisfy the thirst for happiness, for consolation, for reconciliation, for peace; every promise the world makes, it does not keep, but a mirage, and the promised, assuaging and thirst only proves an aggravation of the desire. We find out that this world, without Christ, is a very dangerous without a refuge, it is dry, without hope of refreshment, we do thirst for the living water. Jesus says: "Why not recognize the fact, and say we are thirsty, and ask for God, for the living God?"

I heard the voice of Jesus say,
"Come unto me and rest;
The living water—thirsty one,
Stoop down and drink and live.
I came to Jesus and I drank
Of that life-giving stream;
My thirst was quenched, my soul revived,
And now I live in him.

"As the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." We do not go far without with the world until we find out not only it is dangerous and dry, but it is a weariness place, there is nothing so monotonous as life from the worldling's standpoint. All is bounded, power and agitation are never given, there is rest to the weary in the world: and many who have tried to find rest in the world have been made cruel broils the hearts based on that their lives against the bars of the cage. How infinitely wearisome it all is! Study the faces of men and women in an city but seem to be void of all sense of rest or quiet or peace! Some one advertising for a hundred people to attend church, are living. The desert journey is so long, so languid, so monotonous. Oh, for the shadow of a great rock!

Rest! what a word, what a word. We shall often be faint and weary, even as we are Lord, who often, was tired by the well but never weary of it. There is never a day so weary but you may have a resting place. Provided from the biting wind of the driving storm, and the heat of the desert, of which I can drink he shall never thirst, we may rest. "Sit down under his shadow with great delight." Hear Christ say, "Come unto me, all you that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Find it in his compassion, for he knows your frames; he is tender and compassionate, he remembers that you are dust, find it in his love, for he pities his children, as we shall find rest unto our souls.

I heard the voice of Jesus say,
"Come unto me and rest;
Lay down, thou weary one, lay down
Thy head upon my breast."
I came to Jesus as I was—
Weary, and heavy-laden,
I found in him a resting place,
And he has made me glad.

Refuge, refreshment, rest. A great hope for our great land. Is there still be these things for us. Who can give them but? The solution of the mystery is in the Lord Jesus Christ. Thank God there is a man able to satisfy and to give the world rest. Jesus Christ Jesus, our brother, touched with a feeling of our infirmities.

WHERE THE BEST FRUIT GROWS AND WHERE THE FARMER IS KING

By H. J. DANIELS.

The growing lands between Hudsonville and Vriesland have become thickly inhabited. In no other section on earth are there so many free-acre farmers as are found there, and in no other spot in this state do land prices range so high as on this same much land in that same swamp. Several offerings have been made of late of upward of $400 an acre for this land, but not since Cornelius Spoolman acquired the title of the Sherwood farm has any been transferred.

When land will raise from 400 to 600 boxes of celery to the acre and that celery net the grower more than one dollar per box, it would be the height of folly for him to sell it for less than the net income of one year's crop. So it is that many persons eager to purchase are disappointed and leave for other parts where, even if they do not find a place where land can produce such celery as is produced about Hudsonville, they can buy cheaper land.

JAPS FOR ALGER COUNTY.

It is said that a colony of 400 Japanese from the Pacific coast will settle in the upper peninsula of Michigan, settle in Alger county, and operate truck farms in that part of the state, who are not directly interested in hiring cheap labor are getting nervous over the situation, and labor unions are taking up the matter with the promise of making it even better for contle labor in Michigan than the Pacific coast will do, and there a few years ago. The people who are producing the fruit are not gaining in popularity in northern Michigan at the present time.

It is said northern railroad men are now in California recruiting the Japanese settlers, who will be brought in on special trains during the summer. They will be placed on some of the recently drained lands near Newberry, and will devote themselves to truck gardening to the Chicago market. The reclaimed soil about Newberry is well adapted to raising celery and vegetables.

Already a number of colonies of foreigners have been brought into the upper peninsula, but the colony to be brought from California is the first one made up of Asiatics.

CAPLE'S FINE FARM.

One of the finest farms in central Michigan is that of Caple Bros. of Ionia, owned by W. W. Caple, located four miles north of the city. It consists of all of the farm, with the exception of a few orchards in under cultivation, and the land is famous for the fine crops that it produces.

Mr. Caple makes a specialty of Holstein cattle and he now has on the farm 100 head, as well as a goodly number of horses, sheep and hogs.

The buildings on the farm are usually fine. There are four large barns and a modern house as well as numerous small buildings, all in good condition. The farm was formerly the property of ex-Senator A. J. Doheny.

ALFALFA IN OSCEOLA.

Alfalfa experts who have been touring Michigan during recent weeks, have been raising a howl because some of the Michigan counties have not been raising their share of alfalfa.

This claim cannot be made against the Osceola county farmers, for as many farmers in that section of the state are putting in alfalfa in large area, some of them devoting a fair share of their total acreage to the crass that old King Nebuchadnezzar is said to have fed on when he was mad.

One of the Osceola county farmers who is a firm believer in alfalfa is H. H. Russell of Green township, who owns and farms 320 acres of good land. He has already cut the first 1914 crop of alfalfa from about fifteen acres and he has another patch of three acres on which he turned a drove of pigs over three months ago, where they are making steady gains.

WOOL MARKET AT CLARE.

Twenty-five years ago the man who would have been as rash as to predict that the time would come when $10,000 would be paid for a season's wool upon the markets of Clare, or any other north central Michigan town, would have been laughed at; yet such has been the development of that part of the state that a total of over $10,000 has been paid to the farmers within the territory adjacent to Clare for this year. The average price has close to 22 cents per pound.

With favorable weather from now on the beet crop will prove to be another of the mainstays of the Clare country this year. Last fall an immense quantity was marketed, and elevator men there say they expect the immense crop will be pulled in in the fall.

POTATO EXPERTS IN THE FIELD.

W. F. Raven, field agent of the Michigan Agricultural college, with headquarters in Marquette, has appointed, under the direction of the state board of agriculture, two potato specialists to work in the upper peninsula of Michigan during the growing season. They will make their headquarters in Marquette, and will work out from that city. Together with Mr. Raven they will endeavor to cover all the potato-growing sections of Cloverland except Houghton, Gogebic and Iron counties, which have an unused agricultural expert for county service.

The experts expect to make a fairly accurate census of the acreage and varieties planted, and during the growing and harvesting season they will be prepared to give instruction in spraying, sorting, grading and packing methods.

This is shown the interest of the officials of the agricultural college in the movement to make the upper peninsula the greater potato growing country in the North. The experts will instruct the growers in methods of cultivation and the means of exterminating any disease that may develop.

SEE FINE PROSPECTS.

The farmers of Cheboygan county are highly pleased over the outlook for bumper 1914 crops. Never before at this time of the year have the crops looked better. The recent rains and the warm weather have combined to make the crops excellent and the county is one mass of green fields. The farms in Cole and Pleasant Hill townships are owned by prosperous, even thrifty, farmers who have proved to be in the best condition. The entire district is known as the "Black River section."

Potatoes are certain to be plentiful in the county, because every farm in county unless something entirely unforeseen happens. The potato fields are in fine condition, and at this time in previous years. The bugs seem to be in the grub crops, especially corn and oats.

BIG BLUEBERRY CROP.

Alfred Austin, who is withdrawn his pioneering berry dealer, anticipates that the blueberry crop this year will be a large one, and will give the grower enough employment to all the part of the state who may be seeking work.

He reports an unusually heavy crop, and that all indications point to a prosperous season. The roots have not been hurt by the heavy rains, and the rains have done a great deal of good. The season will be open about July 12. A good berry picker is usually able to earn $2.25 a day. Mr. Austin will employ 50 during the season, which will last about nine weeks.

Michigan Bankers' Association Visit Traverse City on Their Annual Cruise.

On the occasion of the recent trip of the Michigan Bankers' association up the lakes at their annual outing, the D. & C. steamer Eastern States called at Traverse City and spent several hours.

The people of Traverse City entertained the financial men and their wives with trip hospitality, and among other courtesies extended them, gave them an automobile ride over the famous Traverse City boulevards, one of the leading fruit regions in the world.

That trip down to Traverse City was well—paid the state of Michigan well.

BUILT FROM PROFITS OF A CHERRY ORCHARD.

J. W. Markham's Home Near Traverse City.

How would you like to own a cherry orchard that would net you a beautiful country home like the one shown in the accompanying cut, and still have the orchard left from which you could some day obtain other nice buildings and grounds?

That is the home of J. W. Markham near Traverse City. The home does not impress that the savings of the cherry farm for a lifetime, but only for a few seasons from a small orchard. Mr. Markham is a scientific fruit grower, and he is nursing his soil along so that cherries on the farm are large and size will be coming along for many years. His home and premises are mighty attractive to the hundreds of people who motor through that country every summer.

FAITH IN ALFALFA.

Samuel Bartlett of Thompsonville township, Benzie county, has been demonstrating to the people of his locality that alfalfa is a very profitable crop. He has now completed cutting his first 1914 crop, which he had in the fields less than three acres and the quantity taken from the first cutting was 17,000 pounds. The field was prepared for alfalfa some four years ago, and is young, as alfalfa can be raised from the same field for 40 years if not cut out. The second cutting this year will in all likelihood be larger than the first.

SURPRISE FOR BANKERS.

One of the surprises given the state bankers' convention on the occasion of their visit to Traverse City was the big strawberry crop just then being picked. The berries were so large they were served at the dinner given the visitors, and they were the finest they ever saw, and that is saying something for a crowd of bankers. Alpena growers are feeling that the fame of the Alpena berry is traveling far and another year will see carloads of these berries shipped to Detroit and other Michigan markets.

Fruit for the Market.

Fruit of every kind should be thoroughly cooled before being packed for market. Fruit should be picked and packed while warm from the field and sent directly to the cars, unless chilled, will quickly deteriorate.

WAYS ARE ANCIENT

Channel Islands Ruled by Feudal Laws and Customs.

Medieval Stepping Stones Lying Between England and France Afford Atmosphere for Romance That Seem Impossible.

London—In his recently published book, "As It is in England," Albert H. Osborne devotes one chapter to a vivid description of the Channel Islands, "those beautiful bits of rock and verdure a hundred miles from England and but 13 from France, where the English flag is flown and the French tongue spoken." Here in part is his description:

These islands are all but independent, with weights, measures and copper coins differing from the standard of all countries; with feudal laws and feudal customs still controlling men and events of the twentieth century, and where a surviving medievalism pervades the atmosphere for general day romances that seem grotesquely impossible when enacted by men in business and dressed and women in picture hats and bobbed skirts, and that are told to the world by telegraph instead of troubadours.

Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, Sark, Herm and Jethou form the inhabited islands and on them a hundred thousand people have their homes. There is but one family on Jethou and Jersey's population is over fifty thousand. Alderney is seldom visited and concededly does not present enough of distinctive beauty to recommend for the inconvenience of the trip there. But Jersey and Guernsey and Sark possess a peculiar charm of landscape, life and climate that appeal irresistably to the seeker of places and people that are different.

In the oldest of times there was undoubtedly much the same life as in Britain and the Continent, which still stand on the summits of some of the hills. Finally they became Norman and politically and substantially were a part of Normandy. As a result they were essentially Norman and man conquest. Norman they have been and in a restricted sense Norman they remain.

An average change of eight degrees differentiates summer and winter, palms grow unprotected in the open gardens of the island and vine trees heavy with August bloom, and fuchsia trees that blossom through the year thrive side by side with great magnolias with creamy buds, and lush bushes of pink and white oleanders are everywhere.

The street names are in French and the square houses of stone or stucco look very continental. A long stone pier runs out into the sea and then encircling the elbow at right angles backs away a little harbor, protected on the other side by a causeway built upon which stone fishermen's cottages stands in partial ruin. It is a very picturesque scene as the boats swing in. Old women and pretty-faced boys carry huge wicker trays piled with the silver and white glaucus, fine fine yellow peaches and red apples and bunches of grapes for sale to the people. From the esplanade by the water a long, very narrow street with crooked street climbs up the hill lined by all sorts of little shops. The shops are dark, but it is a weariness place, there is nothing so monotonous as life from the worldling's standpoint. All is bounded power and agitation are never given, there is rest to the weary in the world: and many who have tried to find rest in the world have been made cruel broils the hearts based on that their lives against the bars of the cage. OLD BUILDING WITH CLOCKS

Ancient Structure in City of Rothenburg Is Remarkable for Clocks Upon Its Facade.

Berlin.—The ancient city of Rothenburg, one of the oldest in Germany, has numerous quaint buildings, one of which, depicted in the photograph, is remarkable for the clock upon its facade. There are two dials, one showing the hours and the other the minutes. At either side are sinisters, which fly open at the stroke of twelve, disclosing two mechanical figures dressed in the costume of long ago, who raise and lower bent mugs as if drinking a toast, keeping time to the strokes of the great gong. WILSON "CUSSED" BY GOLFER

Man Nearly Hit by Chief Executive's Ball Scores the President for "Carelessness."

Washington, D. C.—A disagreeable occurrence on the links of a Washington golf club marred the enjoyment of President Wilson's golf game, report says.

Mr. Wilson had made a long drive and the ball without circumvention close to the ear of a young Washington attorney, who was playing ahead of the president. The startled player used some emphatic language in expressing his opinion of the carelessness.

Unaware of the identity of the man he had "cussed" he was not thinking on turning to reconnoiter in him the president, very much annoyed.

Mr Wilson was deeply offended and without another word bundled up his golf bag and left the links in high dudgeon.

The member of the club who offended him has written a letter of apology.

WHY NOT FUTURE GREATNESS

Two Qualifications Surely Entitled Young Mother to Fondest Hopes for Her Son.

Occasionally there days one finds a person with a sovrile attitude of life and an adoring, uncritical heart. Such a nurse maid was Fanny, and she lavished all the devotion of her simple heart on her young charge, Bobby. On his first birthday anniversary she sat looking at him in admiration and after a long silence she turned to her mistress:

"Mrs. Blank, do you think Bobby will ever be president of the United States?"

The young mother would not altogether pooh-pooh the idea of such glowing possibilities for her future, so she smiled and said: "Well, you never can tell, Fanny. He might. But why did you ask that?"

"Oh," came the ready reply, "I was just thinking of his ears. He had to be so smart and bright already; and besides, I always thought ears made a pretty president!"—Kansas City Star.

Food in Scotland.

Now that the Scottish holiday season is just about to begin, it is a controversy in the north as in the food provided by the business housekeepers and landlords of Scotland for their patrons from England. It seems that the Scots do not alter their menus to suit the southerners and that some of the southerners resent this. They want more vegetables, for instance, and a greater variety of them. They demand lovely jams (a luxury rarely consumed north of the Tweed, save by sheep), and ask, "Why no spinach?" Also they want a lower temperature, when been in the bedrooms. The complaining controversialists say it is a case of ham and eggs for breakfast, sandwiches dinner and a high tea to conclude the meals of the day. As for beer, they report that Scottish landladies at the coast resorts look askance at people who wash down their food with it. So far the only reply of Scotland to the indictment is that when they are in England they should do as the Romans do and get their beer outside.—London Chronicle.

Infected Rabbits Stolen.

Disease-infected rabbits, inoculated with the germs of tuberculosis and pneumonia, the most dangerous germs, have been stolen from the laboratory of the municipal health office, near Marseilles. It is feared that the thieves may have already disposed of the stolen rabbits to provision dealers. Doctor Roumeguy, as soon as he discovered that the rabbits were missing, informed the police and asked that the public be warned against the sale of the fact in the local newspapers so that persons should beware of eating rabbits coming from a doubtful source. It is probable that for some time the consumption of rabbits in Marseilles and neighborhood will drop considerably.

Nothing But the Truth.

"Mis' Jones, I want to ask Billy, dat yaller gal say she ain't never been kissed. Is dat dat gal tell de truth?"

"Well, don't you believe her, Aunt Sally?"

"No, sahm, dat Ah doo'n. Ah jes' wan' to know whether dat is de truth, de whole truth, and nothin' but de truth."

WRONG BREAKFAST.

Many persons think that for breakfast their meal begins with a breakfast of meat and other heavy food. Yet a light breakfast of anyone can easily discover for himself.

A W. Va. carpenter's experience may benefit others. He writes:

"My wife suggested a trial of Grape-Nuts and I had to eat something or starve. I concluded to take her advice. She fixed me up a dish and I remarked at the time that the quail was a little too small for a meal, but was small—I wanted a succeeded.

But she sent a small amount of Grape-Nuts and a little cream and that I must eat it according to directions. I did so and found the Grape-Nuts and cream, two soft boiled eggs and some toast quite a meal for me.

I eat out meats and a lot of other stuff I had been used to eating all my life, but was greatly surprised that I was getting better right along. I concluded I had struck something that stuck to it. I had not only been eating improper food, but too much.

I was worse than a "drunkard's" trade at that time and thought that unless I fed a body nourishment with plenty of meat, I would play out before long. Instead of a few days or my "new breakfast" I found I could do more work, feel better in every way, and now I feel as if I could do anything.

RECORD OF POLITICAL PERFIDY

Judge Yelland Discloses Details of Consummate Political Trickery

From Riverside Mirror.

The many friends and supporters of Judd Yelland will learn with surprise and regret that after having gone over the situation thoroughly, he has decided to withdraw from the race for congress in this district. Judd Yelland sets forth his reasons in the following statement:

"In April, 1914, I made public announcement that I would be a candidate for Congress in the Eleventh Congressional district. At that time there were three candidates above the Straits, including myself, and two below but I had every reason to believe at that time that the differences between the candidates for Congress above the Straits would be amicably arranged. I have used every effort to bring about such a result and, not being able to accomplish it, I feel the time has now arrived when in justice to myself and friends I should make an open statement to the voters of this district.

"During the month of May two candidates for Congress withdrew, leaving Bayliss and myself above the Straits and Frank D. Scott below the Straits, with sixty per cent of the votes lying south of the Straits of Mackinaw. In February, 1914, and for several months thereafter, Mr. Bayliss, through the newspapers, proposed and offered to submit to an elimination process with the other candidates for Congress above the Straits. I discussed the matter with my friends and finally notified Mr. Bayliss that I would consent to such an elimination along the lines suggested by him. I offered to enter into any fair arrangement which would permit the republican voters of the Upper Peninsula to decide between Bayliss and myself. Bayliss came to Escanaba with two of his friends and we discussed the matter in an informal way, which was finally agreed to by Bayliss, his friends and myself, and it was clear that all the voters might thoroughly understand and decide the proposition which was to have been submitted to them, the next day I put the entire proposition between Bayliss and myself in writing and mailed Bayliss a copy thereof. About ten days later Mr. Bayliss went back on his word and attempted to make political capital out of the very proposition which he had been proposing for several months and had traveled from the Soo to Escanaba with his friends for the purpose of securing my consent to such an arrangement. I was frank to say I was very much surprised when I learned that Bayliss had gone back on his word and had really never been sincere in the proposition he had been publicly making through the newspaper. But in reality had been resorting to political trickery which I would not countenance. With this in view I made no echo or rain and that spirit has never prevailed among sincerely loyal Republicans.

"I am sure that I would have received more votes than Bayliss in the counties above the Straits, which fact is not only confirmed by Bayliss refusal to carry out with me his pass and promises to other candidates, but also by the fact that the Republican press of this district is not supporting Bayliss. In fact, a very large part of the Republican voters in each county above the Straits are unalterably opposed to the nomination of Mr. Bayliss. I state this for the purpose of showing that I was justified in being a candidate.

"Although I have not made any active campaign, I have spent some time to determine the possibility of my being nominated in spite of the conditions occasioned by Bayliss' change of mind, and although I have the endorsements of the Republican County Committees of Delta and Menominee counties and the assurance of support from the rank (and file of the Republican party in every county above the Straits including Chippewa, where Mr. Bayliss lives, still after a thorough investigation I have become convinced that neither Bayliss nor myself can be nominated. This situation has been brought about by the attitude of Mr. Bayliss and through no fault of mine. I feel that any amount of effort from this time forward would be fruitless against the one candidate who seems to have the undivided support of the counties in several counties above the Straits. In view of the entire situation, and after consulting with my friends I am satisfied that the sentiment in the counties above the Straits have so crystallized that it is impossible for any candidate north of the Straits to be nominated for Congress at this time, and I therefore withdraw my name as a candidate with a hope that the part of the district composed of Menominee, Delta, Alger, Luce, Schoolcraft and Mackinac counties at some future state will be recognized by our sister counties below the Straits in the rotation of the Congressman, which unquestionably will be beneficial to the district.

"JUDD YELLAND."

Special Services

Rev. Arthur J. Bowen, of Chatham, Ont., will pay a week's visit to Charlevoix, to conduct revival services in connection with the Baptist church. Mr. Bowen, who will be the guest of Rev. J. G. C. Irvine, has been a missionary in Africa, and tells a most interesting story of his experiences there.

He commences his meetings on Wednesday afternoon. On both Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, August 5th, 6th and 7th there will be a Bible Reading at 3 p. m. in the Baptist church and Revival Service at 7:30. Children's Services will also be conducted at 4 p. m. on Friday and the same hour on Monday, August 10th.

On Sunday August 9th, Mr. Bowen preaches at 10:30 in the Baptist church, 3 p. m. in the open air at the park and 7:30 in the Congregational church. The last meeting will be a harvest meeting on Congoland, delivered in the Baptist church on Tuesday evening.

A Petoskey special says: Upon the arrival of summer resorters this season, a wholesale pilfering system, with the object of robbing cottages during the winter, was disclosed. A number of cottagers found their summer homes had been entered during the winter and indiscriminately robbed of articles of value. One cottage at Bay View was relieved of a whole gray coat of furs, from one of Otto, a boat was stolen from beneath a cottage, and sent to cart away valuables from the house. Similar cases are reported at all the Little Traverse bay and Crooked Lake resorts. Sheriff Purple and Prosecutor Sweeny of Emmet county are busy looking into the matter and hope to be able to make examples that will put a stop to the practice.

Heart to Heart Talks

By CHARLES N. LURIE

PAY UP!

Here's a joke that is being repinted throughout the United States:

"I'm paying all my debts. I believe the end of the world will come next month."

"I don't understand your logic. If I thought the end of the world was coming next month I'd order a lot of stuff on credit now."

First have your lunch at the best.

"Then think about the mental and moral state of the man who would be willing to "order a lot of stuff on credit" and have the world with his debts unpaid. Not very honest, is he?

And how about the man who is willing to keep on living, without thought of the world's end or his own, with debts accumulating all around him?

Not actual debts of money or goods perhaps, but debts of service to his fellow man or woman, which he contracts by the mere living and receiving the benefits which derive to him from the efforts of others.

Every one of us owes more than he can pay. Every one is a debtor to the world. "The debt we owe to nature is the mortality laid upon us at our physical nature—the necessity of dying. We bear much of it, but loss of the debt we owe to life—the obligation to live so that the Keeper of the Great Account may credit us with putting more into life than we got out of it.

We owe to our fellow-men—the innumerable caravan which moves. To that mysterious realm where each shall soon be—

The chamber in the silent hale of death, Thither all the dark the quarry goes at night.

Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed

By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave.

Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch

About him and lies down to pleasant dreams.

If you think over the matter correctly and sincerely you will realize that you do not want to leave the world a creditor to you. The "live-stay hope of immortality" urges us to the belief that we shall know and shall feel in our later lives the thoughts and feelings of the world. We want it made of us, "The world owed him much" not "He got more out of the world than he put into it."

Of course in the case of the man in the joke he guided his thought and projected action on the idea that the world was about to come to an end and that every one would perish with it.

A better rule of action is the belief that the world will continue to exist for an indefinite time after we have left it.

Has Motorcycle Regiment.

Limousine offers for service in case of war with Mexico, Senators Borah and Brady of Idaho have received this from Charles W. Dempster, formerly of Idaho, now living at Wickenburg, Ariz.

SYNOPSIS.

John Valiant, a rich society favorite, quarrels bitterly with his father, Colonel Valiant, who was the principal source of his wealth, and leaves his home, vowing never to accept a penny from his father. He goes to Virginia and secures a position as a white collar boy in a Richmond cotton mill. Colonel Valiant, in his will, cut John out of the family, leaving the bulk of his fortune to his son, Stephen Valiant, and his daughter, Jessica, who married Jack Dandridge, a Virginia gentleman. Shirley's mother, Mrs. Tennant, married Hilaire Bonaparte, a descendant of the Corsican family, which, however, disowned the family, father and a son, Hilaire, Jr., who married Jessica Valiant, died in Paris, leaving a daughter, Jessica, who married Jack Dandridge, and a son, Stephen Valiant, who married Shirley Dandridge, daughter of Jessica Valiant and Jack Dandridge. Shirley's father, Mr. Tennant, died when she was a little girl, leaving her a fortune. Shirley's mother, Mrs. Tennant, married Jack Dandridge, her daughter's father-in-law, and they lived happily for a few years, when Jack died, leaving his widow and two children, Stephen and Shirley, to the care of their father-in-law, John Valiant. Shirley's mother, Mrs. Tennant, died when Shirley was a little girl, and John Valiant, her father-in-law, became her guardian. The Torch Lake ninth annual regatta will be held this year at Alden, on Torch Lake, August 19th and 20th. The fact that this year is one of the biggest resort years ever experienced by Northern Michigan has led the committee in charge to prepare for an unusally large number of entries, and a correspondingly large attendance. The principal event of the regatta is the open race for fast motor boats for the Association Silver Cup trophy. The usual aquatic, carnival and bond-walk features will be in evidence. The officers of this year's associations are E. F. Dodge, president and Leo O. Bloomer, secretary and treasurer.

Boyne Journal: James M. Feltz, of Charlevoix, candidate for nomination for State Representative, was in the city this week looking the ground over. The chances are that he will find might slim picking in the city as he will be remembered that Mr. McMillan got nearly every vote that Boyne City had to give the last time, and the people of this community are talking especially kind of the Italian gentleman. Mr. McMillan has a well earned reputation for being honest with his constituents and his community in general is entitled to the customary second term, which he will get, it is almost certain, without a struggle.

Construction of Panama Canal in Pictures

Wheels rumble, Pulleys creak. Huge dredges swing tons of dirt into space. This is punctuated by a big explosion. More dirt flies. Hundreds of tons of rock are carried by traveling cranes to their destination. Giant steel mixers prepare the concrete. Then it is run out in great buckets on swinging cables and dumped with a crash and a roar. The pendulous concrete walls grow higher and higher. Men wigwag signals with flags across gaping chasms. Steam whistles blow shrill warnings and cryptic orders. Giantic girders are swung into position. It seems that everything is man-made. It is man, machine, yet there are thousands of men working. Everything—men and machines—move with the precision of clock. The Panama Canal is in the making. The greatest epic since the dawn of time is being written. Artists are writing it, and an American publisher, Lyman H. Howe, will show this conflict between man and nature in the Majestic on August 1st far more vividly than any writer can describe it. The task of words are too colossal for words. Films alone can portray this prodigious undertaking and those reproductions presented by Mr. Howe are the only ones that do so adequately. To miss them is to miss the opportunity of a lifetime. The program will include many other big new features.

MEETING OF THE ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC—ONE OF THE STRIKING MOMENTS IN LYMAN H. HOWE'S REPRODUCTION OF THE PANAMA CANAL

The apples are being secured which are to be taken to Boston to be exhibited at the apple show in connection with the 79th annual convention of the International Apple Shippers' association. Last year the exhibit made by the Western Michigan Development bureau, won the silver medal for the northern states reaching from Maine to Minnesota, and this year it is hoped that the bureau's exhibit will win the silver cup competition given, which is to be given for the best showing of apples made, regardless from what part of the world the exhibit comes. The apples are to be picked as near August first as is possible and gotten to the east in good shape. They are judged for size, color, and degree of maturity for that date, and due allowance is made for the climatic differences that exist between northern and southern counties.

The dirty insinuation that have appeared in a local paper concerning Senator Frank D. Scott, have been proven by reliable witnesses to be absolute falsehoods, and the probability is that the said local paper may have to "show down."

The recent copious rains have poured joy into hearts of the farmers, and it may be said safely that all danger to crops is passed. Everything is booming, and conditions give promise of abundant crops of all kinds. In this year of our Lord nature has been lavish.

Information came from Norwood Tuesday that people in a row boat near that place found floating what appeared to be a part of the bridge of a steamer. On the wreckage was the name in gilt letters, "Geneva." Looks like a disaster, but thus far no boat of that name has been reported as lost.

Mrs. Robert Shrier and her talented son Audrey, of Washington, are here for a few weeks' stay. Mrs. Shrier is the daughter of the late Captain Walter Clifford, U. S. Army, who was well known by old settlers. "Little Audrey" has an established reputation as a juvenile vaudeville attraction in Washington and more southern cities.

A gasoline or oil stove set fire to the Cohen house on South Bridge street Wednesday afternoon of last week, resulting in the interior being ruined, with considerable furniture and fittings. The house was occupied temporarily by Dr. and Mrs. Levi Lewis, whose only name of Mrs. Lewis' clothes and personal effects. Loss on house and furniture covered by insurance.

This is simply to advise our honest-minded readers that in this local opposition to Senator Scott there is a great big black rogue in the fence. The writer of this is, so far as favors are concerned, past the limit. There is for him nothing to be gained by the election of either Scott or Bayliss. But he warned that there is, in the case of the local branch against Scott, a most discreditable and selfish motive underlying the whole job. Refer to their files of for the thing is settled, and remember the warning. There are things that should not be spoken.

The East Jordan Enterprise says that bill mass has decided to enter the field as a candidate for State Senator. Now we shall expect to see Mac Harris take to the tall timber.

Albert Holmes leaves this week for Armada, Mich., where he is to superintend the erection of a Congregational church. There are very few in this or any other locality better qualified for the job.

Dr. Ethel T. Smith, Osteopathic Physician, has opened office at Mr. Frasier's residence 106 Clinton St. and will be in Charlevoix Tuesday, Thurs. and Saturday of each week until Oct. 1st. The editor of this paper knows Dr. Smith and cheerfully endorses him.

The editor was presented with a fine bouquet of garden cinnamon pinks out day last week.—Elk Rapids Progress. We are not well posted in the language of flowers, but we think the gift was intended to convey the idea that the editor was "punked," as it were.

Indiana Independent: On Wednesday T. N. Chapin, who is a candidate for the republican nomination for Representative, received notice that the supreme court had decided that the 1913 legislative reapportionment law was unconstitutional. This leaves Antrim county in a district by itself.

Mrs. Ada Lord died at the home of her mother, Mrs. Silas Swales, on Thursday last, after a brief illness. Funeral occurred from the Swales home on Belvedere avenue, with interment at East Jordan, her former home. Deceased was born in Vermont 37 years ago. She came here from East Jordan two years ago.

East Jordan Enterprise: We had thought that the Kennedy Journal was the dirtiest political paper in the district and a disgrace to the city and section of the state in which it is published, its political items being largely personal villification and abuse. This week's Charlevoix Courier, however, makes a strong bid for a similar notorious position, sinking quite below the straits. Personal abuse of candidates in political campaigns should be rebuked by all decent voters.

Silas W. Swales has taken a contract for the building of another tug, but we are denied the privilege of giving name. This is a matter that the "committee of 21" should sit up and take notice of. This is a marine town. There is not a first-class opportunity for enlargement along the line of marine construction and equipment. There is no interest that dovetails into our navigation advantages like marine construction and repair. Silas has proven his ability to turn out first-class work, and our "boosters," if they intend to do anything but talk, should awake to the opportunity that confronts them, and do something effective.

Traverse City Record—The first West Michigan moving pictures being taken this afternoon in the Morgan orchards on the outskirts of the city. The story being put upon the reel is that of the delights and healthfulness of the outdoor life that goes with the cherry harvest. The moving picture camera is set up among the trees and an accurate record of the movements goes through with in the picking of cherries is obtained, also a scene which shows how the cherries are carried to the packing tent in six-quart tin pails and from there are picked over and put in cases, the case labels, loaded into the wagon and hauled to the feed cars.

Mr. Ira Campbell, of San Francisco, is spending a few weeks here with his parents, Capt. and Mrs. P. D. Campbell, after several years' absence from the parental home. This is another boy who has registered "A 1 with a star." Mr. Campbell graduated in law from the U. of M. several years ago and went west to "grow up with the country." He immediately attached himself to a leading Spokane law firm, and was assigned to the firm's marine department. In this specialty he made a reputation, and was offered a partnership in San Francisco firm with the same assignment of work, which he accepted. He has practiced in the "City of the golden gate" for five years with increasing success. He is accompanied by his wife.

Without any doubt whatever, the Al G. Barnes animal show to be here next Thursday, is the biggest and best attraction ever presented here. We have read some very flattering press notices in Michigan papers.

Mr. H. C. Dolph, of Chicago, is spending his summer vacation with his cousin, Miss Eva Adams, at her beautiful Ironton resort. Old settlers will remember Mr. Dolph. He was the secretary of the Pine Lake Iron Company when R. M. Cherrie operated the furnace which gave the mouth of South Arm its name. There are yet a few remnants of the old plant left which awaken recollections in passing—the rotting dock piles, and solitary charcoal kiln, and the old store building standing back on the sagging quail. The row of help homes have been converted into cottages, and the promises have been made attractive to the most exacting lovers of nature. It is indeed a lovely spot, once livid with the furnace blast and rank with charcoal gas.

Boyne Journal: That Herman I. McMillan, of East Jordan, will be the next representative from Charlevoix county is already a foregone conclusion. His first term, according to all reports, amounted to much more than the usual first term amounts to and it is safe to say that he will do things this time. "Mac" is one of the most reliable men in the county. His judgment is always sound and, taken from every angle, he is as safe a man to represent the county as we could select. He knows how and when to act and best of all, he does not talk too much.

To the People of Charlevoix County:

I have decided to become an active candidate for the nomination of Prosecuting Attorney and am taking this means of letting my friends throughout the county know that I desire support. I have had a hope that some day I would have the honor of being the Prosecuting Attorney for my home county. I believe this is a laudable ambition for any attorney.

I have practiced law in Charlevoix County ten years. I have waited for the older attorneys of the county to reasonably satisfy their ambitions, and I do not think I am presumptious in now asking the people of my home county to make me their candidate for Public Prosecutor, to the exclusion of the other candidates who have either held the office for a reasonable length of time, or who have recently become lawyers and who are anxious to be placed in an important office without first having had college training made practical by years of active practice.

My name will be found on the primary ballot among the republican candidates.

LETTER FROM SENATOR SCOTT

July 27, 1914.

To Editor of the SENTINEL,
Charlevoix, Mich.

I just received the open letter, from Mr. William E. Hampton, which was published in the last issue of the Courier.

I appreciate that Mr. Hampton is very much interested in my opponent's candidacy and I consider my time too valuable to devote much of it in answering Mr. Hampton's letter or to encourage the controversy which he seemingly is anxious to continue for the purpose of advertising his friend. In this country a man is presumed to be innocent until he is proven guilty after a fair trial. I am sorry that Mr. Hampton considers me a "political faker" and "all things to all men." Such general assertions prove nothing, except the unfair, unjust and immoral methods of politics used and adopted by every school supporters of some particular candidate.

This small controversy in Charlevoix County is the only one in the district, and it strikes me as rather strange that with all my alleged shortcomings, Charlevoix County should be the only one favored with an airing of my past life. The allegations made against me are not true and, although the falseness of those assertions may carry pain and sorrow to my friends and my family, they do not effect me in the least because I have a clear conscience and a clean bill of conduct and I am sleeping fine every night.

In my former letter to you I challenged Mr. Hampton to name the gentleman who had been promised the postoffice and I was not a bit surprised to have him mention Mr. Dutton. I am glad Mr. Hampton considers Mr. Dutton a "fine, enemployer young man," as Dutton's shoulder-to-the-wheel your last issue will probably close this windy controversy and I am pleased that Mr. Dutton was not called upon, and did not vary or digress from the line of truthfulness and honesty.

I have never read any article charging my opponent with promising any postoffice, and incidentally Charlevoix postoffice, and as a proof of my fairness in this contest I want to say that I do not believe my opponent has promised any postoffice to any one, not even to Mr. Hampton, who is so ardently supporting him.

Yours very truly,
FRANK D. SCOTT.

RT. REV. DANIEL S. TUTTLE

The Rt. Rev. Daniel S. Tuttle D. D., Presiding Bishop and Primate of the Episcopal church will have charge of the services at Christ church Sunday morning.

Bishop Tuttle was one of the first missionary bishops to be sent out into the mission field of the western states, having been consecrated for his work nearly fifty years ago. By the canons of the church the oldest bishop by right of consecration is the Presiding Bishop of the church and it is certainly a rare privilege to have such a man with us.

A very hearty invitation is extended to all to be present at the morning services at 11 a. m. and hear one of the pioneers of the church.

CHANGES HIS COAT WITH SENTIMENT

Escanaba Mirror:

Joseph E. Bayliss of Sault Ste Marie, candidate for the Republican nomination for congress in this district, is going through the district injecting the "wet" and "dry" issue into his campaign.

In localities where the sentiment is "wet" he is the "wetest" of the wet advocate that ever aspired for an office.

In localities and with individuals who are known "dryer" he is the only original prohibitionist in the Eleventh district.

Evidence that he is making a saloon campaign in wet districts is offered by the fact that his campaign cards are being displayed in scores of saloons.

Evidence that he is claiming to be the one best bet of the "dry" element is shown by the personnel of his active supporters.

Bayliss is daily changing his coat to meet the conditions that he finds.

MACKINAC HOTEL BURNED

When the steamship Manitou left Mackinac Island Tuesday noon, the Mission Hotel, one of the best known resort hotels, was enveloped in flames. The hotel was a large structure and was owned by a number of business men, prominent in the state of Michigan.

PRIMARY SCHOOL MONEY

Apportionment Made by State to the Several Counties—Railroad Taxes Did the Trick

County Treasurer Payton has been advised by the State treasurer, that the amount of primary school money apportioned to Charlevoix county is $42,081.99. The appropriation will be made on the basis of $7.10 for each child of school age, the per capita being slightly lower than last year. Some of the railroads in the state have not yet paid their state tax or the rate would have been higher.

Emmet county gets $39,568.30.

THE INJUSTICE OF IT

The chief arguments used by this small, bigoted coterie of Senator Scott's opponents, are, first, that he is a "politician." We do not know of a candidate for office anywhere who is not a "politician." The term, when used discriminately, is no discredit. When a man runs for office, he necessarily becomes a politician. There are good politicians and bad politicians, just as there are good preachers and bad preachers. Nothing has yet been presented as evidence that Frank Scott is a bad politician. He has always been square with the people, and nothing has been shown to his discredit.

The other "argument" is that he is controlled by the liquor interests. This is merely an assertion, without a shadow of proof. He has never cast a vote in the Senate that has proven the assertion. It is merely a lie for a purpose.

Give us the evidence.

THE HEATHEN RAGE

We hear a great deal about the heathen. The head-hunters in the Philippines and the Zulus in Africa; the worship in the Jungles and Temples of Mexico. They say those are uncivilized races because they kill each other.

And then we have read about the civilization of Europe where countries undoubtedly the boasted civilization of the Western world.

Yet these peoples of "advanced civilization" are about to murder each other because of the imaginary danger to their "spheres of influence." The political equipoise of Europe is threatened, and hence they must kill each other to preserve it.

And this is "civilization."

God save the mark.

ARMY WORM TO QUIT MICHIGAN

Agricultural College Expert Sees Hope for the Farmers by the End of July

Another week will see the end of the army worm, according to Prof. Rufus H. Pettit, entomologist at M. A. C. The pest which has been working such havoc throughout the state is the second generation of the insect, which under ordinary conditions does not live much later than the first of August.

In view of this fact the M. A. C. expert expects that within a few days the invaders will burrow into the ground and develop into pupae and Michigan will be rid of the worst epidemic of worms that has afflicted the state in Eighteen years.

A third generation, however, will appear in September, but it is not believed it will be dangerous. The hopeful attitude on the part of the college specialist has been taken as a result of the discovery that the tachina fly, the natural parasitic enemy, is thriving to such an unusual extent on the best of weather that by September it will be able to cope with the pest.

The college has dispatched two men, Dr. G. D. Shafer and G. C. Woodin, into the field to help farmers. The college men are moving from county to county demonstrating methods for coping with the pests.

THE CHARLEVOIX CHAUTAUQUA

R. H. Finger, the Redpath Chautauqua agent, is in the city to help the local committee in their Chautauqua campaign. Mr. Finger states that the program is one of the best that has ever been on a Chautauqua platform anywhere in the United States and it has met with tremendous success all over the country. The business men of Charlevoix are one of this proposition and need the support of every energetic citizen of this city. A thousand season tickets have been purchased by the committee and will be sold for $2.00 until they are exhausted than the price will be raised to $2.50.

The people of this community are indeed fortunate to have for the opening number on their Chautauqua program the Dunbar Bell Ringers and Male Quartet. This organization is not only one of the most unique, but also the oldest one of its kind in America. They carry with them a set of over two hundred bells. The heaviest bell weighs twenty-six and a half pounds and is the largest bell ever cast in a foundry lower than any church bell in the United States.

The program the Dunbars give is a most varied one. It consists of three parts—vocal, instrumental and bell ringing. As a male quartet Messrs Malcolm Wood, first tenor; Arthur Nevell, second tenor; Earl McConnell, baritone; Mark Swingley, bass, they make an ideal vocal organization. As instrumentists Arthur Nevell, pianist, and Earl McConnell, violinist and J. Malcolm Wood, cellist possess are markable talent. As bell ringers the entire four are superb. All are talented artists. Their repertoire is so very limited. In the afternoon they give only the program, in the evening they present a full concert using the Dunbar bell bells. As versatile entertainers the Dunbars has no peers in all America. They have appeared in every state in the Union, Canada and Mexico. Just recently they appeared before three thousand people at Winona Lake Assembly, Winona Indiana, and were accorded one of the greatest receptions of their entire career. Their condition of "Silver Threads Among the Gold" on the bells is one of the most inspiring pieces ever played. They have never given a concert anywhere in America without being greeted with round after round of applause.

A CAUSE OF BUSINESS DEPRESSION

President Wilson some months ago appointed a big commission to investigate and report on the cause of the present industrial depression, and try to suggest a remedy. To his surprise Saturday's view that there was no industrial depression, this action was somewhat peculiar. This commission have been investigating the coal mining industry in Illinois, and they report:

1—Coal miners in district, 80,000.
2—Coal miners employed, 30,000.
3—Employed part time, 20,000.
4—Idle coal miners, 40,000.
5—Wages of coal miners when working, $3.50 per day.
6—Cause why miners not employed is that speculator casinos sell mined coal for enough to pay cost of mining.

It is easy to see that the loss in wages of these idle miners helps along industrial and trade depression.

In this connection a circular sent out to a number of bankers throughout the country to compare labor pay checks cashed this year compared with a year ago, and reports from 61 banks keeping such items separate indicate $65,000,000 less this year than last in cashing pay checks in these banks alone.

Shortage of cash in the pay envelope explains industrial and trade depression.

GRIM VISAGED WAR

ALL EUROPE AFLAME — THE GREAT POWERS OUT FOR THE SLAUGHTER

The inevitable has come to pass. Conditions in Europe have for years been shaping themselves for a general conflagration.

It has come.

Last Friday Germany invaded France, crossing the neutral territory of Luxembourg. Russia, the ally of France, invaded Germany. The mooting of Germany and France resulted in the repulse of the Kaiser's forces with heavy loss.

All the great European powers except Italy, and most of the secondary powers, are mobilizing with all their energy.

Mobilization has not reached a stage where any of the armies have met in battle, other than a few skirmishes.

Italy, which declared her neutrality, will mobilize officially.

Great Britain's mobilization of army and navy is nearly completed, but she has not announced that she will join in the general war.

On Monday, war officially existed between Austria and Germany on one side and Russia, Servia and Montenegro on the other.

There has been no official declaration of war between Germany and France as either side. But the German ambassador in Paris received orders to demand his passports.

German armies have violated the neutrality of Holland, Belgium, Switzerland and Luxemburg.

England, France and Russia have united to fight Germany.

FRANK SCOTT STATES POSITION

Congressional Candidate Disclaims Knowledge of Having Been Endorsed By Local Organization

Kenosha Mirror:

Frank D. Scott, Republican candidate for Congress, arrived in the city this morning. Interviewed by a Mirror reporter, he said:

"I saw in one of your local papers yesterday that the liquor interest of the county held a meeting last week and endorsed my candidacy. This was news to me. I know nothing of it until I saw it in this newspaper which is opposing me. It seems as though I would know if I had been so endorsed. I am seeking by every fair means all the votes I can get and every citizen has a vote regardless of his occupation or business, and I cannot and will not be the critic of the support I may receive. I have not been called upon, neither have I made any pledges to further my candidacy. My record in the legislature will speak for itself. I favored good laws and was not influenced by faction or class and if I should be nominated and elected I shall unhesitatingly do as the majority of the people in my district wish because I believe in a majority rule. The same paper intimated that I was campaigning this county with a certain clique. This is absolutely false. I have done all my work alone, and the nearly two thousand working men and business men whom I have met and to whom I have given my cards knows that I am stating the truth and they are living witnesses to prove my assertion.

"Unfortunately when a man becomes a candidate for any office from constable to Congress he is the subject of false and maligning statements in certain newspapers, who, for some reason are opposing his nomination however I shall not stoop to such conduct nor do I countenance it, even if it would insure my nomination. I want to be nominated by a clean campaign, by clean people and by clean votes.

"I cannot afford to have a brass band to announce me but I stand for a square deal to all and special privileges to none."

The VALIANTS of VIRGINIA

SYNOPSIS.

John Valiant, a rich society favorite, suddenly discovers that the Valiant estate, which was his father's pride, has gone to pieces under the strain of extravagant wealth, had failed. He voluntarily turns over his private fortune to his creditors for the benefit of his father. His entire remaining possessions are his yacht, a small farm in a white trash dog and hunting country, and a limited estate in Virginia. On the way to Hunter court he meets Sally Lee Bridge, an auburn-haired beauty, and decides to make her his wife. Sally's father, Bennett Bridge, owns the Valley Land Ridge, and Major Bristow sandpaper rule. Bennett Bridge and Major Bristow think that the middle class is "trash" and a "menace." Sally's mother, who is a cousin of the head of Mrs. Lansdowne's set, is quite Bennett and Valiant fought a duel on the road, and Valiant, who is a crack shot, shot Valiant Bridge's hat off his head. Valiant breaks and respects and Sally's admiration for the nerve of a suitor who delivers from the mouth of a snake. Sally Lee Bridge is a great horsewoman. Her brother asked her to marry him. Valiant leaves for the country to be alone and think. He stops in a small village and meets Sally. Sally's father, Bennett Bridge, and Major Bristow become good friends. Mrs. Landridge Bains and Mrs. Lansdowne are in the set. Valiant is invited to the Lansdowne's to take a cut from the yearly horse show. Valiant and Sally

PLUM ORCHARD ON THE SHORES OF PINE LAKE

There are 250 plum trees four years old in this orchard. Beyond the trees and on the terrace which overlooks Pine Lake at this point are the summer houses of the owners of the Eveline Orchards, and the homes of their friends. This is a proposition where summer resorting and fruit growing are combined. Now that the trees are coming into bearing the profits from the fruit harvested pay the expenses of the vacations of the owners.

SCOTT HAS EASY RACE

Candidate for Congress Spent Yesterday in Escanaba While on Tour of This District

Escanaba Morning Press.

Hon. Frank D. Scott, of Alpena, candidate for the Republican nomination for congressman from this district, spent yesterday in Escanaba and is highly enthusiastic over the manner in which his candidacy is being received in every part of the district. Mr. Scott spent yesterday in meeting voters about the city and will later return to Delta county to make as nearly a complete canvass of the entire county as possible, considering the wide expanse of territory included in this congressional district.

Mr. Scott is opposed only for the republican nomination by Joseph P. Hayliss, of the Soo, who it is now practically admitted has been eliminated from the race. A resident of the Soo who was in Escanaba last night enroute to Gladstone announced that Hayliss would be unable to carry his own county. He asserted that while the candidacy of Hayliss was opposed by many people in his own county from the outset it was believed until recently that he would carry Chippewa county but that the opposition has now grown to a point where it is practically certain that the Soo candidate will not carry his own county. From Menominee county, Schoolcraft and Mackinac, the principle voting counties outside of Delta, the reports are unanimous that Scott will sweep the entire end of the district. A concentrated movement to rebuke the Soo man for his unfair dealings with Delta county's candidates for congressional honors earlier in the race, has taken root throughout the republican end of the district, insuring a sweeping majority for Scott in what earlier in the campaign had been thought to be his enemy's country.

The rapidly dwindling strength of Hayliss has been particularly noticeable in Delta county in the past few weeks and that Scott will carry this county with a sweeping majority is admitted by all who are in touch with the situation.

CONSIDERABLY STIRRED UP

Charlevoix is already beginning to show the effects of the war excitement. The summer colony embraces very many prominent business men and financiers from the large cities of the country, and business is being seriously touched.

Financial circles are putting their houses in order for emergencies, hence notes of all sorts are turning time faces toward their homes for a time. Our summer people, especially those located, and the wives are kept busy in adjusting matters to existing conditions.

Official Call for County Convention

A County Convention of the Socialist party of Charlevoix County is hereby called to be held in the hall over Gremel's Furniture store in the city of Charlevoix, Mich., on September 5th, 1914, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of electing one delegate to the State Convention of the Socialist party which will be held on Monday, September 28th, in the city of Lansing, Mich., and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

Each township and each City Ward in the county will be entitled to one delegate to the County Convention, and the village of Boyne Falls will be entitled to one delegate.

All delegates to the County Convention are to be elected at the Primary Election to be held on August 25th, 1914.

By order of County Committee, Socialist party.

Dated at Charlevoix, Mich., July 31st, 1914.

D. C. NUTTLETON, Secretary.
FRED H. THOMAS, Chairman.

To the People of Charlevoix County:

I have decided to become an active candidate for the nomination of Prosecuting Attorney, and am taking this means of letting my friends throughout the county know that I desire support. I have had a hope that some day I could have the honor of being the Prosecuting Attorney for my home county. I believe this is a laudable ambition for any attorney.

I have practiced law in Charlevoix County ten years. I have waited for the older attorneys of the county to reasonably satisfy their ambitions, and I do not think I am presumptious in now seeking the people of my home county to make me their candidate for Public Prosecutor, to the exclusion of the other candidates who have either held the office for a reasonable length of time, or who have recently become lawyers and who are anxious to be placed in an important office without first having their college training made practical by years of active practice.

My name will be found on the primary ballot among the republican candidates.

Services rendered by Payton and Van Pelt, agents, will be paid by the satisfaction they have already received by having been informed that Charlevoix county has the best pole of any county between Chicago and Mackinaw.

It has come to us that many are disappointed because they were not asked to contribute to the putting up of posts with signs on the West Michigan Pike and to all such, we will say a word of comfort. In finishing the new level road to Burgess and for filling in holes and ruts and leveling the high knobs (not "High Balls") between Burgess and Petoskey, you may all have an opportunity to show your generous interest in a substantial manner in your own city and it is to be hoped that the names of all men so interested will appear on the right side of the ledger.

Many Cheboygan county farmers feel they have been treated unfairly in the adjustment of insurance matters connected with the Farmer's Mutual Fire Insurance company, of Charlevoix, Emmet and Cheboygan counties. A meeting will be held in the near future to take some action relative to satisfactorily settling affairs.

RICE PLANTING IN JAPAN

SUPPLYING THE ROOT GRADUALLY DRAWING WATER THROUGH BAMBOO PIPES

IN THE early spring, while the fields are still swarming over the rice fields in Japan, there is an aspect of timeliness and desolation about them. To the European eyes accustomed to dry-cultivated soil, or green grass meadows with feeding cattle in them, the sight of so much mud and water in the landscape appears depressing, and there is a great absence of human habitations and people as well, but the character of the crops under cultivation makes it necessary that the peasants should be housed in settlements or villages away from the large wet areas given up to the growing of rice and other crops.

These rice areas are divided up into fields or plots of all shapes and sizes by small grass-grown ridges a few inches in height, and averaging about a foot in breadth, thus enclosing the soil used in which the rice is planted. The preparation of these fields is extremely arduous work, involving much hoeing and careful construction of these oval dams, and it includes a whole system of terracing, whereby the water necessary for irrigation is led gradually down from field to field, for the slight rice-plant rice requires flooding. The little streams and rivulets which provide the water for these terraced hills and wide valleys are very often seated by bamboo plants, and these streams feed the ditches cut for water channels; narrow tracks or footpaths are also made through the rice fields. But if these fields look desolate at springtime, there is no lack of life in them when the planting season begins in June, for then they are filled with men and women busily engaged in transplanting the young rice plants; and, fortunately for this industry, Japan possesses a large supply of cheap labor. The seeds of the rice are first thickly sown in the small wet fields, or nursery beds, in the early spring (April), and when the young plants have attained the height of four inches or thereabouts, they are very carefully transplanted to the larger fields, at wider intervals, in rows, and, as may be imagined, this is an exceedingly laborious kind of work. Anyone who looks at the immature little plants in the nurseries, with their vivid green shoots and delicate leaves, and notes the removing of them by hand to the larger fields and planting singly seems an almost impossible task, and yet, as we have said, it might be so; but the peasants of Japan have been accustomed to this tedious method of cultivation through many centuries, and, from habit, it is taken as a matter of course, and the men and women, standing kneedeep in the mud and water and stooping over their tiny rice-plants, appear as little to be thinking out of the young rice in the soft mud. The value of the harvest is probably in their minds as the reward for all this labor.

The eastern agricultural laborer must be seen to be fully realized. Japanese backs are supple but the sight of so much stooping and bending is enough to make a European feel the pains of humanity in his back from the mere contemplation of it.

When the rice is growing up then the fields show a very brilliant green, and they are kept under a few inches of water all the time the rice crops are growing, which is only drained away just before the harvesting of the rice. The rice plant blooms early in September, and the crops are reaped in October, and hung up to dry on short poles. The threshing is done with flails or hackles, a kind of comb. Various methods of fertilization are used by the Japanese farmer, some of them most unsavory to the European nose; in fact, the "smells" that emanate from the ground in the autumnal months in Japan often destroy one's sense of appreciation of their fertilization when inspecting it closely, and the Japanese people must either have less keen noses than ours or else do not mind the odors, for they appear in no way to affect them as they do ourselves. If a European takes a walk in the rice fields, or "cider fields," as he calls them, during the hot months he is sure to get severely bitten by mosquitoes, and if Europeans live near the rice areas these pests are a great trial during the summer.

Some Europeans have stated that Japan produces two crops of rice yearly, but this is an erroneous idea, speaking generally. Two winter prevents the growing of more than one crop yearly, but there is a part of Japan that does produce two crops yearly, but the Tosa province, in one of the southern islands, has this advantage owing to the difference of climate there, caused by the Kuroshio, or "black current," which, flowing northward from the direction of Formosa and the Philippine islands, warms the southern and southeastern coasts of Japan, very much the same way as the Gulf Stream warms the coasts of western Europe; and partly on account of her position geographically with her long stretch of country from north to south, and the influence of winds and ocean currents, Japan has a large variety of temperature throughout the whole empire.

Rice is very largely grown in the southern islands as well as in the southern part of the main island, where one sees very extensive rice fields, but not in the north. There is a kind of dry rice grown, but this is not of good quality.

The rice grown in Japan is reckoned among the best in the world, and she takes third place among the rice-producing countries, and exports very large quantities. She imports rice as well, and this may sound strange to a rice-growing country, but the quality of her home-grown rice being so very fine, she exports all she can and imports cheaper rice for her home consumption from Korea and China and India that is of inferior quality and cheap. It is well known that Japanese rice it is used freely among the poorer classes. Although it is the staple food, other grains are used as well—millet, barley and wheat are cultivated and have been grown for food during past centuries in the country. Crops of these are grown during the time when the rice-fields are fallow. Two kinds of potatoes are grown as well for consumption.

Hitherto the rice consumers in Japan have been mostly the people living in the towns, the peasantry looking upon it as somewhat of a luxury. But the classes of consumers have been widening out and the standard of living is growing higher in Japan, and more rice is consumed in the country than formerly, and this, in addition to the fact that the population is rapidly increasing, means that the question of the production of the food supplies in the country in the future is one that has to be seriously considered, and for these reasons the Japanese government has considered the question of the increasing demand for food supply very carefully.

Many years ago the institutes for agricultural experiments were established, and these are doing their work well. Much has been carried out for the rearrangement of the farm fields, in the partitions, and in the irrigation systems of farmers and canals; works of this kind carried out in sufficient extent will enlarge the farm areas very considerably and lessen the necessity for opening up any new land for cultivation. It is by following these methods that Japan is preparing herself to meet the increasing demand for food. Failure of crops and consequent famine have to be met by larger imports, but necessarily cause great distress among the people.

Times and seasons are scrupulously regarded by the peasantry for all their agricultural operations. The terrific storms in the typhoon session are very much dreaded early in September. When

BIG HEARTS AND BIG HATS

Writer Sees Combination That Seems to Go Together at Times in the West.

And even as coats and comprehension, also seem to widen in the West, so hats and hearts grow taller, writes Dr. Paul Street in Collier's Weekly.

The derby plays an unimportant part in Texas. It will make a feeble effort for a summer, but wear out or turn it. Else an ignominious death beneath an avalanche of soft felt hats. Felt hats around Chicago seem, how ever, to lack the full-blown western opulence. Contrasted with hats in the real middle West, they are stingy little headpieces. When we were in Chicago this city seemed to be the center of a nexus in which a peculiar style of hat was prominent—a blue felt with a velvet band. But that, of course, may merely indicate, not so the hats a little farther west. The Mississippi river marks the beginning of the big stack hat belt. The black hat is partly satisfy adored in Missouri and Kansas. It never changes, never goes out of fashion. And it may be further noted that many of these sombre, monumental, soft-back hats, with their high crowns and wide-spread brims have been sent from those two western states to Washington, D. C.

At Kansas City there stands a hat—a hat! The Missouri hat sound, but its supremacy begins to be disputed. It has an even larger hat, of similar shape but different color. The big hat in pastel shades is also in vogue at Kansas City. Also, one sees now and again upon the streets a cowboy hat with a flat brim. When I mentioned this to a Kansas City man he didn't seem to like it. With passionate vehemence he declared that no cowboy has ever worn a brim to adorn the heads of Kansas City men; that they only come to Kansas City on the heads of itinerant cattlemen.

THE SUPREME SPECIMEN OF LITERARY MUSIC.

(By HENRY AUGUSTUS BUCHTEL, Chancellor, University of Denver, Former Governor of Colorado.)

"There are no songs comparable to the songs of Zion, no orations equal to those of the prophets, and no poetic lore those which the Scriptures teach."—John Milton.

My common account the Bible stands apart as a well of English undefiled. It is the supreme specimen of literary music. Not only Theodore Parker who said: "The collection of books has taken each fold of the world as no other. The literature of Greece, which goes up like incense from that land of temples and heroic deeds, has not half the influence of the Bible. It was Renan, brilliant and superficial, who characterized the Gospel of Luke as "the most beautiful book ever written." The spiritual ideals of the Bible are in the mind wrote when the Theodore Parker and Renan write so glowingly about it. But the pure English, the simple dignity and the unmistakable charm in the style of the Bible have influenced men of power most profoundly. It is the exact truth to say that it has formed the style of all speakers and writers who have most enduring influence for good. From Shakespeare to Lincoln it has given color to the most inspiring poetry and prose. Several books have been written to show Shakespeare's debt to the Bible. As for Lincoln, he knew his Bible, in every line of it. His speeches are saturated with its language and ideas. His second inaugural reads like a section from Isaiah. When he first went East, in 1860, the Professor of Public Speaking in Yale College followed him about to hear his speeches. James Russell Lowell says in his essay on Marlowe, "The English of Abraham Lincoln was so good because he learned it from Shakespeare, Milton and the Bible, the constant companions of his leisure. And how perfect it was in its homely dignity, its quiet strength, and the unerring aim with which it struck once now needed to strike more."

THE BIBLE AND MUSIC.

(By ROBERT STUART MacARTHUR, D. D., LL. D., President, Baptist World Alliance.)

"To say nothing of its holiness or authority, the Bible commends itself to every man of taste and taste than any other volume in literature."—Lamartine.

To the Bible we are indebted for the noblest music of the world.

Invention borrows music's wings. And music takes Devotion's wing. And like the bird that hails the morn They soar to heaven, and soaring sing.

"The songs of the day are for the day; but the music that endures is religious music. The Ambrosian and Gregorian chants are the echoes of little song. When Handel was discouraged by attempting to give opera in a foreign language, he accepted an invitation from several noblemen of Ireland to visit Dublin. From a friend he received a text from the Bible on which he composed his immortal work known at the first as the "Sacred Oratorio," known now as "The Messiah." Both in Dublin and in London this work gave him immediate fame; and it has since crowned him throughout the world with undying glory. The dead which music, painting, sculpture, and literature owe to the Bible cannot be fully estimated. The Bible gave us the "Creation" of Haydn, the works of Mozart, of Mendelssohn, and of Beethoven, the grand chorals of Bach, and the works of all the great musicians the world has produced. It has been well said that Haydn has not exhausted the "sphere of creation, nor Handel the glories of the Messiah; and there is vastly more in music in the Bible than has ever yet been heard by the children of men.

DR. FRANCIS BACON, "MASTER OF THOSE WHO KNOW."

(By ALBERT S. COOK, PH. D., LL. D., Professor of English Language and Literature, Yale University.)

"We account the scriptures of God to be the most sublime philosophy."—Bacon, "Advancement of Learning."

By Francis Bacon (1561-1626) is one of the glories of the English literature; by his case of the glories of the human mind. Some of the opinions entertained concerning him by modern authorities are these: "In Bacon, as far as was possible in one man, the learning of the age met and mingled." "There is no author so stimulating." "Two men stand out, the masters of those who know," without equals up to their time among modern Greek Aristotle and the English man Bacon." Now his first biographer, who knew him intimately, writes: "This lord was religious; for though the world he set to conquer and prejudge great wits and politicians to have somewhat of the atheist, yet he was overcharmed with God," as a proof of his reverence for the truths contained in the Bible, notwithstanding his sanguine belief in the triumphs of learning and inventions, this prayer of his will serve:

"To God the Father, God the Word, God the Spirit, we ascribe of duty and humble and hearty supplications that what we have spoken concerning the calamities of mankind and the pilgrimage of this our life, in which we wear out days few and evil, would please to open to us new refreshments out of the treasure of his goodness for the allaying of our miseries. This also we humbly and earnestly beg, that human things may not prejudice such as are divine; neither let the doors be unlocking of the gates of sense, and the kindling of a greater light of nature, anything (for certainly or intellectual stuff may arise in the mind towards the divine mysteries, but rather that by our mind thoroughly cleansed and purged from fancy and vanities, and yet subject and perfectly given up to the divine oracles, there may be given unto faith the things that are faith's. Amen."

LONGFELLOW'S INSPIRATION.

STOLE TO GET NEW START

Bank Cashier Experiences Overpowering Impulse to Get Some Place and Start Life Anew.

A bank teller in a middle western state grew weary of the narrow, circumscribed life he was living where he lived; he wanted wider interests, a new start in a new place, but a start with capital so he could push himself ahead. He took $18,000 of the bank's funds, jumped into his automobile and started for Mexico (this was before the present revolution across the Rio Grande had reached such serious proportions) across Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas. Quelled Klondike Bullies

On my return to Dawson in the evening I strolled into the "M & N." saloon, where from the rather disturbed atmosphere of the place I noticed something was amiss. One man was just picking himself up from the ground, while most of the attention was concentrated upon a drunken miner sitting on a billiard table. On inquiring what trouble had arisen, I was informed the miner had "buffaloed" the saloon—in other words, he defied the crowd or any of the barmen to put him out of the saloon. Considering himself up was one of the latter; to put him outside. No one accepted the invitation till the door opened and a trooper of the R. N. W. M. police in his red coat strolled in a quiet unassuming manner. Nobody for any way appeared to notice anything was particularly wrong. The first trooper strolled up to the table, and, looking steadily at the drunken miner, quietly ordered him to put on his coat and get out. The miner swore and blustered; but at the repeated order, this time in rather sharper tones to put his coat on and walked out like a lamb. The two troopers followed. They did not even trouble to search him, the occurrence being so unusual.—Sunday Strand.

"This little incident made me realize what an influence this small body of men had gained in the world's opinion of country. During the great rush the troops of this corps—one of the finest that ever ruled the king's dominions—did their work in the dry north on their wages of 1s a day, when the lowest wage for ordinary unskilled labor was seldom under 20s. During that same rush to Klondike not a single murder was committed in British territory.—From "A Wanderer's Trail," by A. Luton Ridger.

Temperature and Cricket's Call.

It is well known that the cricket's cry occurs at very regular intervals, but recently it was observed that the frequency or number of times per minute depends upon the temperature, at a certain rate, and at 14 degrees it rises to 190. For each degree there is noticed an increase of four. Should this be true, we thus have a cricket thermometer which it only remains to graduate, the latest starting the barometer in order to have an efficient meteorological outfit.—Scientific American.

CULTIVATION OF GINSENG IN NORTHERN MICHIGAN

Custer Higgins' Ginseng Garden, Near Benzonia.

By M. J. DANIELS.

If you are persistent, try ginseng growing. If you are not averse to much detail and backbreaking work, try ginseng growing. If you are an Independent and have a desire to be able in a few years, after having worked hard, to tell others to work while you take it easy as your conscience, not caring whether a high tariff or a low tariff is going to wreck the country or whether wheat brings 50 cents or a dollar, or whether potatoes yield 50 or 250 bushels to the acre, just grow ginseng.

It pays. If you are "out to your job" if you are one, you might just as well grow 10-cent potatoes. It is a crop of a niche or a fashion. There is always a market for all you get of the stuff, but the trick is to get it. If you get it coming, it is like raising Swiss chard for a season; there's no end to it.

Northern Michigan is doing its full share in the way of growing the Chinese root, the ginseng for the market which Chinese nation, Near Cadillac, Adolph Drahm has nearly an acre of ginseng that a $10,000 government bond would not be taken in exchange for today. In two more years that little garden will be yielding an annual income of $5,000. Other farmers in that neighborhood are doing almost as well with their ginseng. Near Empire, Kalkaska, Sioux Lodge, Benzonia, and other places there are farmers who have gone through the first stage with the root and are answering taking off several hundred dollars in profit.

Custer Higgins of Benzonia, Benzie county, is one of the men who have most about ginseng growing, and who have excellent gardens. His garden is not so large as Mr. Drahm's, but is just as profitable considering its size. In a few years it will be the most valuable little piece of land in Mr. Higgins' possession; in fact, it will be the best piece of strip of land in that part of Benzie county, use owing to the fact that it is made a few annual license off the ginseng crop alone.

A HEAVY WOOL BUYER.

Mark Oppenheim of Dowagiac is one of the heaviest individual buyers of wool in Michigan. In a few days of this season he will have purchased over a quarter of a million pounds of this year's clip. He does not confine his operations close to his home market but goes far afield to secure his shipments. Last week he covered several southern counties and secured nearly a thousand pounds, shipping it east.

During the last few years Oppenheim took every pound offered for sale in Dowagiac, as well as in Niles, Three Oaks, Harrison Springs, Holton, Big Rapids, Reed City, Traverse City, Ludington, Manistee, Fremont, Shelby and Camden, besides some smaller points.

The largest single offering was from a man near Buchanan, the load weighing 1,657 pounds. Mr. Oppenheim has been buying wool in Dowagiac every forty years and has handled millions of pounds. In former years when every farmer kept a large flock of sheep it was not an unusual thing to see thirty or forty wagons on a Dowagiac street at one time, but "those days," says Mr. Oppenheim, "half a dozen wagons are well with a more wool than is now raised in the entire southwestern Michigan territory.

The wool market remained very steady around Dowagiac the week ending, bringing 32 and 33 cents, although for some choice fleeces the price went a bit higher.

MARTIN PLANS BIG PURCHASE.

Victor J. Martin, one of Indiana's land owners, accompanied by William Wiss, was in Benzonia and Crystal and counties last week looking over the ground.

Mr. Martin is looking for tracts of land suitable for the growing of ginseng, pleased with the looks of things agriculturally that he plans to close a deal for several hundred acres near Houghton lake. He is attracted by the low prospects for the land, and by the great fishing in the lake, which will be close to his future home.

CLEANING OUT COMMON MINT.

The Beebe mint farm, near Niles, formerly owned by the late United States Senator William Lorimer of Chicago, is not devoted entirely to mint growing. The farm is large, in addition to the 50 acres of mint, 50 acres of Hubbard cabbage. A large force of men is employed by the Beebes, and last now they are employed pulling the common mint from the long rows, leaving only the variety known as English mint. The latter is a stronger plant and leaves more oil.

On their Niles and Dowagiac farms last year the Beebes secured a record yield of 100 oil to the acre, according to this variety. The cabbage patch is a new venture for the Beebes, but it will produce thousands of tons of cabbages, and if the owners have their usual success they will find a market for every pound of it.

The kind of hog fence for this day and age is some style of woven wire.

Hens Greet Opportunity.

Now is the time for farmers who have a greater opportunity for the highest degree of health than the farmers, and very frequently they do so use who is more indifferent to these same conditions.

Excellent Green Feeds.

Clover and alfalfa are excellent green feeds for chicks. These legumes contain high percentages of protein, which the little chicks need to make them grow.

Fliers Overlooked.

Because it is a busy time of year we are apt to let rites go beyond the most profitable age. A weight of two or three and a half pounds brings the top price.

Influence of Records.

Record keeping of the dairy has its influence on the man in more ways than the profit in the herd. The man who is a good, systematic record keeper is always a better dairyman than the one who is loose and inefficient.

BREAD AS HOG FOOD.

Bread as hog food has been experimented with around various sections of the country by a number of stock raisers, and the staff of life is declared by those who have tried it to be a most satisfactory pork producer. Thousands of loaves are consumed weekly by the swine on the several farms where the bread is fed, with results proving beyond doubt the economy and efficiency of the plan.

The bread comes from the big City Cracker bakeries in cartons, packed in sacks containing 80 loaves each. It costs one cent a loaf, and at that price is considered very cheap, as a stock food. The bread is soaked in barrels of skim milk and then fed to the hogs. The animals are said to thrive on the diet of bread and milk, the ration being one well balanced for their needs. Some farmers have also been giving the bread and milk diet to their poultry, the younger fowls especially, which matters rapidly into fryers and broilers. Several hog raisers who have not hereafore tried the "bread idea" method of feeding swine, report to other commission from Chicago, which they say is even cheaper than feeding corn at the present time.

THE CANNING INDUSTRY.

One would think that the only argument needed to urge the farmers of various parts of the state to grow more canning fruits and vegetables would be the reports of things done in one season in a canning factory. At Hartford, for instance, the canning of two concerns canned half a million cans of green peas, not to mention other varieties of fruit and vegetables.

The S. M. Carpp factory put up 100,000 cans of tomatoes, 50,000 cans, two pounds each, while the Tracey factory, with a slightly larger output than the Carpp plant, reached a somewhat larger pack. The crops delivered to the two Hartford plants were grown on about 450 acres of land. The season was unusually early this year. The season opened June 15, two weeks earlier than ever before, the season was over with the close of the first week in July.

The cherry crop in that part of the state was enormous, the largest in many years and the factories are getting up large quantities of them. The pack of gooseberries is also large.

BIG PRICES FOR POTATOES.

M. M. Collins of Ionia county has secured the contract for furnishing the soldiers' home at Marion, Ind., with the supply of potatoes for the coming three months, and the prices he gets are the highest he ever drew on such a contract. For furnishing the federal prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kas., a contractor secured the bid at 81 cents per bushel, which is the highest price ever paid there, and it is valid if there should be a long period of dry weather, the contractors would lose money at that. It is said that $1 a bushel would be paid for all potatoes to be delivered in Chicago just now.

BEAUTIFUL SECTION OF THE WEST MICHIGAN PIKE.

The second tour of the West Michigan Pike association along the two-mile pike from St. Joseph to Petoskey, along the West Michigan shore of Lake Michigan, which was made during the past week, was even more successful than shown in the accompanying photo. There were about 100 automobiles in the line, including members of the state board of health, who gave talks on "Health First." The political men talked in relays, some leaving one point immediately after their talks, going on to other points in the itinerary, while others followed them with speeches. This was the first effort of the state board to start a health propaganda in a automobile, but it will be one of the features of a more orderly and easy way to make this venture a regular thing for some time—until the question of health has been thoroughly pounded into the people, who are being told in present times that the same zeal that now so many thousands are seeking to prevent accidents

The White Holland, the Narragansett and the Black are all splendid varieties, though smaller than the Bronze turkey. If you intend to raise small birds, these are more suitable.

Fresh Air and Sunshine.

Fresh air and sunshine are important as well as food. Hens keep in a close, stuffy house without sufficient air and sunshine never lay the maximum number of eggs.

Separate Hens and Pullets.

The young pullets will lay better than wisdom if the house is divided with a wire partition, so that the hens and pullets are not confined together during the first part of the winter.

Historic English Town Seeks Assistance of Namesake in the State of Massachusetts.

Boston, England—The name of the little market city away in the fens of the historic county—Lincolnshire—is closely associated with eighteenth century American history.

For this reason it is not surprising to learn that the mayor of Boston, Mass., has received and promptly responded to an appeal from his brother mayor in this town, to help save a crack in the Boston "stump," which is the name by which the church tower of the ancient parish church or St. Botolph, dating back to 1309 (the largest and finest parish church in the kingdom), is locally known.

The story of the crack is curious. The tower is nearly 300 feet high, and in former times, when revolving lights and electricity were unknown, was used as a beacon to ships at sea.

The "stump" has been through many storms on that rough coast, and in 1908 the southwest pinnacle of the lantern was swept into the churchyard and the bell chamber roof damaged. It is probable that the damage, if not quickly repaired, must have been made at that time.

TWISTED SPIRE ON CHURCH

Religious Edifice in Chesterfield, England, Has a Steeple That Appears to Be Crooked.

London.—In Chesterfield, England, is a church the spire of which, no matter from what point of view one appears to be dangerously crooked. The church is located prominently, and the steeple is seen from almost every road entering the city, as well as from the railroad. In spite of appearances, the spire is safe and sound. A spiral construction was adopted and this makes it appear bent. In reality it is plumb.—Popular Mechanics.

PURITY AS A NATIONAL ASSET

Dr. R. F. Miller at Homeopathic Convention Warns Against the Social Evil.

Atlantic City, N. J.—"The greatest prophylaxis against the increase of the social evil is a deep conviction that will keep the youth of our land from temptation," said Dr. R. F. Miller, in an address before the bureau of dermatology of the American Institute of Homeopathy this afternoon.

"This is a day of preventive medicine," he continued, and it behooves us as physical men to contribute our part in awakening the public consciousness to the value of a clean life as related to our future well being as a nation. The greatest thing for a strong nation is to have a generation of men with clean bodies."

The scientific theory concerning the movements of the eyeball is erroneous, according to Dr. Riker Gerhard of Chicago, who addressed the Ophthalmological, Otological and Laryngological society.

"It has been taught that the eye revolves on an axis from side to side," he said, "but the real motion of the eyeball is an oscillation, the center of motion being at a point where the vision is best."

GETS WITS BY WORKING DRILL

Paris, France.—The radical cure of a cretin—one who suffering from cretinism, a disease characterized by physical deformity and imbecility—by grafting the thyroid gland of a monkey, was described at the Academy of Medicine by Doctor Voronoff, a well-known surgeon.

The patient, a child of fourteen, was attacked by myxoedema at the age of eight as an after effect of scarlet fever. His physical and intellectual growth stopped. Six months ago Doctor Voronoff, in the presence of eighteen doctors, grafted on the child's neck the right lobe of the thyroid gland of a large baboon.

Almost immediately the patient began to improve and marked development took place in body and mind.

BEAR KICKS MAN INTO RIVER

Wounds Fail to Put Beast's Hind Foot Out of Commission to Hunter's Sorrow.

Greville.—To be unceremoniously shoved off a rock and thrown 30 feet below to the Pasmer river and forced to swim out by a bear is bad just shot, was the experience of Antoine Lorent of Oakland at Jubilee.

Gilart was out on a fishing trip and spotted a 125-pound bear in a pool. He emptied his revolver at the beast, and shot it several times. The wounded animal ran between two big rocks and was caught in a wedge at the side of the river.

Gilart ran up and seized the still kicking beast by the hind feet. He had no sooner grasped the foot than the bear gave a spasmodic kick and hurled Gilart into the river.

CHANGES AT CRACOW

Polish Capital Has Grown Rapidly in Last Decades.

Improvements Are Noted, Especially in the Suburbs of the City—Important Canal Being Built—Some Landmarks Remain.

Cracow, Poland.—There are many Poles in America who have not seen the ancient capital of their country for ten or even twenty years. They can form no adequate idea of the changes that have taken place within that lapse of time, both on account of national developments of Galicia and of the orientation of all classes of new, toward this city, which may truly be called the heart of Poland. If anyone should chance to return on a pilgrimage to Cracow, he would not be so much struck at the next glance. That the railway station should be completely rebuilt, vast and unrecognizable, would not be of much importance. All the distinctive characteristics and landmarks have been piously preserved.

On alighting from the train he would enter the "plantations"—that great garden of park planted with horse chestnuts all around the central city in the place of the destroyed walls and filled up most—and seemingly find nothing changed. The old gray Florian gate would look down upon him and so would the spires of Our Lady's church, and the pinnacles of the "Clothiers' Hall" (Sukiennice), just as of old. True, where there were no street railways or only a one-horse affair he would now see an immense fire hose electric car dashing together and if he came in the evening instead of the "Florian gate" lamps, he would see the whole place lit up by more like 50 electric suns.

But the great changes are the outskirts of the town and beyond the "plantations." In Karmalicka, Dluga, Enterprisowa, where almost every house was thatched and had but one story, all have two, three or even four stories. I went to the old street by the Vistula the other day; all along the shores great embankments are being swiftly raised, and a long canal joining Cracow with the Oder and the Baltic sweeps down to the Vistula from beyond the Rionie. Where is the Rudawa? Where are the yearly possibilities of inundation all along its course? Echo answers, where? The picturesque fortifications, the bank over which a local railway largest and fastest, I hear, is being used Cultcura Soap we told her to try it so she got some Cuticura Soap and Ointment and used them. Robbed to Play Poker.

In one of the southern states a man whose habits were bad, robbed an express company of several thousand dollars. Instead of decamping he remained in the city. He confessed to the theft and said he had lost the money playing poker. The surety company sent a man to prosecute the thief. He found the defaulter had been receiving a good salary from the express company and had thrown away the reason for his job. They dropped the case. Further investigation revealed the fact that the county treasurer had sent to the same game and won most of the money; the other players were friends of the county attorney. The surety company dropped the case and paid the express company the amount of the loss.

HOPE FOR THE BALD HEAD

Sewing Hairs on Scalps is Proving Successful—Not Gold Wires Are Used.

A method of sewing hairs in the human scalp in cases of partial or total baldness has been successfully used in several instances by Doctor Sensaty, at the hospital of Saint Stephan at Budapest, and a report appears in the London Times.

The 'plant' of hairs 'planted' in the head of a patient has been as many as 50,000. One hundred hairs are drawn through punctures in the scalp at every square centimeter, and as both ends are left free, the number is then 200, or over one thousand to each square inch. Very fine gold wires are used, one five-hundredth of an inch in diameter, and one long hairs from a woman's head are attached to the middle of these. The gold loop or knot acts as an "anchor," and after sterilization is introduced into the subcutaneous tissue, where it is slightly twisted, and holds the hair permanently in position. It is stated that 500 hairs can thus be introduced into the scalp within three quarters of an hour.

Doctor Sieskuly has designed a special instrument for introducing and fixing the gold wires. The latter are so light and so fine that the total amount of gold in the scalp after "planting" 50,000 hairs is only one gramme. The hair is stated to appear perfectly natural, and a sample of tissue appears to form around each gold wire knot. The inflammation resulting from the treatment entirely disappears in form ten to twelve days, and is no case so far has any intense inflammation or suppuration resulted. The hair can be washed, brushed and treated with oil in the ordinary way, and one of the earliest patients so treated, a lady, has retained her hair intact with the original luster and flexibility, for over seven years.

HASH SPREAD RAPIDLY

Granton, Wis.—"My sister had a very bad, deep, wet, running sore on the side of her face and it ran up to her ear. It commenced with a small blotch of pimples which turned to a kind of rash and spread rapidly. It was very inflamed and red and we got some time and slightly swelled. A thick fluid dripped and ran from the sores which looked like water. Then the swelling would go down and it would keep on spreading. It hurt her so her during sleep and she would be restless. It was a kind of scaly.

"She treated for some time and it did not help her. It kept spreading larger and larger. I heard about and used Cuticura Soap we told her to try it so she got some Cuticura Soap and Ointment and used them. It was two months when it was gone." (Signed) Miss Emma Retzlaff, 5-7, 1914.

Western Michigan is now in the midst of the biggest cherry harvest in its history. In years gone by big crops and profitable crops of cherries have been harvested, but nothing that equals the crop of 1914. Already 100 carloads of cherries have gone forward from Traverse City alone, besides the heavy shipments from Frankfort, Northport and other points. The weather conditions this year have been ideal for the cherry, and in consequence the trees are heavily loaded and the quality is good. Fully 1000 people in the vicinity of Traverse City are engaged in the harvesting and marketing of the crop, and the total yield for the season will be in the neighborhood of 200 carloads.

Petoskey News—Miss Winifred Kelley of Honor, Mich., committed suicide on Day View last night, her body being found by the Day View dock this morning. The suicide was evidently accomplished late last night by jumping from the dock. The body was found floating near the dock by J. G. Nichols, of the Prophet's Inn, on Fern Ave., and was identified after being taken to Hemka's undertaking parlors in Petoskey. The deceased was seventeen years of age and had come to Bay View five weeks ago as the maid of Mrs. Ruth Apted at the Apted cottage on Terrace avenue. She was apparently despondent over the refusal of her parents to allow her to immediately marry her lover. The parents objected on the grounds that Miss Kesley was still too young to marry.

Petoskey News—Residents of North Bay in Charlevoix county are telling a good story at the expense of Arthur Urquhart, of Boyne City, who is out after the republican nomination for prosecuting attorney in that county. It seems that Mr. Urquhart is not overly well acquainted in Bay township, especially along the finest country lies between Ironton and Bay township and Friday he was over in Resort township drumming up votes among the Emmet county farmers. He had spent quite a portion of the day visiting the various farms before being informed of his mistake. Resort township farmers are having a good laugh at Mr. Urquhart's expense as are also the Charlevoix county residents. Mr. Urquhart is one of four candidates for the republican nomination in this county.

Petoskey News—It's up to Petoskey to do something to retain the summer visitors at this resort. Each succeeding year sees larger numbers going out from Petoskey to the many summer resorts where there should be an increase in the numbers who remain in Petoskey. There is now a movement on foot among the hotel owners, small summer hotel owners and boarding house proprietors, merchants and business men to organize a golf club with links within a mile of the city and a big amusement park on the water front is also a desirable feature being discussed in business circles. The return of the big excursions from the south are also being urged as there were money makers for all Petoskey people. We "get together" for all Petoskey if the summer population is to be retained right in Petoskey.

"Speaking of bumper crops, there is one you mustn't overlook, and it is a mighty important one for Benzie county, Michigan, too," said W. E. Wolcott, general passenger agent of the Pere Marquette railroad. "I refer to the crop of summer resorters. I have just been making a round of the important northern resorts and they all tell me that this is a great season, that the hotels and boarding houses are well filled and all the cottages occupied. I know that the Pere Marquette has been carrying more people in the resorts this season than ever before, and what the Pere Marquette is doing is equally true of the other roads and the steamship lines. A successful resort season means a great deal for Michigan. It brings many thousands of dollars into the state and the money is widely distributed."—Grand Rapids Press.

Central Lake Torch—The Antrim county fair will be held September 29th to October 2nd. The indications are that we will have the finest and best fair in the history of the county. Every effort is being made to make it a grand success in every way. The dates have been set later than in former years, in order that the various farm products might be ripe. This will insure a much better agricultural exhibit than ever before. Horse races, ball games and various other field and track sports are now being arranged for. Thursday, October 1st will be school day. On this day the interscholastic championship will be decided, both in base ball and in field events. This days program will be more fully described later. There is a splendid feeling throughout the county in regard to the fair, and not only the citizens of the immediate vicinity, but hundreds of others, are putting forth every effort to make this year's fair the very finest and best in the history of our county.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION IN THE FAMILY

(By REV. JOHN M. McCORMICK, D. D., Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church.)

"The Bible stands alone in human literature in its elevated conception of Godhood as in purity and conduct. It is the invaluable training book of the world." Henry Ward Beecher.

One of the pressing problems of the day is the religious education of the young. The teaching of the Bible is not officially permitted in the public schools. Parochial day schools and Sunday schools can not keep the whole children. There must be religious instruction in the home, for the moral and spiritual nurture at the south end of this age. Oil still comes from the crevices of the rocks surrounding it, and is found on the surface of the water. Moreover, the human soul, as Lord Jeffrey says, "is a deep, fault" or crevasse in the earth's crust, where one side of the crack has slipped down thousands of feet and in the process has from time to time unloosed the forces pent up below. Earthquakes have abounded in the region, thus recording the spasmodic movements in the earth's crust, which are the cause of earthquake tremors.

The description of the destruction of Sodom in the Bible accords so perfectly with that of the explosion of a reservoir of gas and oil under high pressure that it bears upon its very face indubitable marks of being that of an eyewitness. Abraham looked down from the heights near Hebron and "lo, the smoke of the land went up as the smoke of a furnace." And in the direct description is said: "Then Jehovah rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire from Jehovah out of heaven." These are exact descriptions of what would take place in case a slight earthquake had released and ignited some of the reservoirs of gas and oil which we know have been imprisoned in that region.

It is only in recent years that we have come to know much about such reservoirs. At the present time they are frequently penetrated in the Russian oil field at Baku on the Caspian sea. Occasionally there a reservoir is struck in drilling which spouts forth 150,000 barrels of oil a day. Sometimes those such wells have taken fire and been burning at once, the kindled material rising in a column hundreds of feet in height and the burning spray being carried to points several miles distant, the sulphurous particles falling down upon ships and houses five miles away.

On telling the great oil expert, Mr. I. C. White, these facts on my return from Siberia a few years ago, he said that he could "go one one better," for he had supervised the drilling of a well in Mexico that spouted out 100,000 barrels a day. It is incredible that such forces are imprisoned beneath us, but the late Prof. Edward Orton, one of our most distinguished scientists, told me that he had seen the pressure gauge on a gas well in central New York register 2,600 pounds to the square inch, whereupon the pressure of the piston of a locomotive engine rarely rises above 150 pounds. The forces of the Lord's omnipotent for the production of a "miracle" are limitless.

THE SUBLIMEST MORAL CODE OF THE AGES.

(By THEODORE KEMP, D. D., President Emeritus of Brown University.)

"It is a relief to the Bible, the fruit of deep meditation which has ripened in the sunshine of moral and ideal. Ernest Renan.

The law of Sinai has not been repealed for the Sermon on the Mount superseded. Who is ridiculous enough to ask for the Ten Commandments and who dares to remove a single "Thou shalt not?" Every vital virtue is here implied and every cardinal sin is here condemned. Not all our legislation, in education and morals, can cannot improve upon these commandments. Man may contrive to break them, but we may question any man's right to call himself a man who attempt to shape his life and when thou walkest by the way and when thou lieest down and when thou rieest up? And we are told in the book of Proverbs, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

Instruction in the law and in the great tradition of the chosen people was part and parcel of Jewish home life. At twelve years of age Jesus Christ was able to converse intelligently with the doctors of the law, and he grew up as every child of Bible-loving parent should: "And the child grew and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom, and the grace of God was upon him. • • • And Jesus increased in wisdom and in stature, and in favor with God and man."

If we want the next generation of generous citizens to be God-knowing and God-fearing men and women we must see to it that they learn the Bible stories and catch the Bible spirit at the mother's knee and from the father's lips. Happy is the young man who can say, For I was my father's son, tender and only beloved in the sight of my mother. He taught me also, and said unto me, Let thine heart retain my words; keep my commandments and live.

THE DESTRUCTION OF SODOM AND GOMORRAH.

(By C. FREDERICK WRIGHT, LL. D., F. G. S. A., Geologist, Oberlin College, Author of "Man and the Glacial Period, Etc.")

"There is no doubt but that, if we could find, in any age of the world, either religion or law that did as much as and was quite good as the Bible."—Sir Francis Bacon, father of modern philosophy.

The southern end of the Dead Sea is in a played out gas and oil region. Bitumen results from the evaporation of petroleum, which bubbles up in great sheets from the shallow bottom at the south end of this sea. Oil still comes from the crevices of the rocks surrounding it, and is found on the surface of the water. Moreover, the human soul, as Lord Jeffrey says, "is a deep "fault" or crevasse in the earth's crust, where one side of the crack has slipped down thousands of feet and in the process has from time to time unloosed the forces pent up below. Earthquakes have abounded in the region, thus recording the spasmodic movements in the earth's crust, which are the cause of earthquake tremors.

The description of the destruction of Sodom in the Bible accords so perfectly with that of the explosion of a reservoir of gas and oil under high pressure that it bears upon its very face indubitable marks of being that of an eyewitness. Abraham looked down from the heights near Hebron and "lo, the smoke of the land went up as the smoke of a furnace." And in the direct description is said: "Then Jehovah rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire

Billions of Gallons of Water Hoisted. The Pennsylvania Department of Mines estimates the total capacity of the pumps below ground in the anthracite field at more than 3,000 tons a minute. This means that they can pump at capacity nearly 1,500,000,000 tons of water per annum, commenting the editor of Coal age.

At the present time these pumps are actually handling approximately 750,000,000 tons of water each year. Than 10 times the water are lifted for every ton of coal mined. Such a quantity of water would fill a canal 10 feet deep, 100 feet wide and 4,800 miles long.

At some collieries water is hoisted as well as pumped to the surface. In a shaft at Hazelton a 2,000 gallon tank is hoisted 35 times an hour.

Elegant Blouses in Voile and Organdy

A Bit of Finery for the Small Lady

ONE of the handsomest of the many beautiful lingerie blouses which have added so much to the beauty of apparel this summer, is very clearly pictured here. It is made of fine organdy and depends for its effectiveness upon the fineness of the fabric and the faultlessness of the work as well as upon a fine choice of lace and embroidery used in decorating.

The upper part of the blouse is cut in kimono fashion from a piece of the organdy tucked in squares. Tucks an eighth of an inch wide, a quarter of an inch apart, form the yoke, add a pretty color note and a dainty finish.

Both those models are finished at the waist line with a narrow belt which sets under the skirt. There is very little work on the blouse of voile but the daintiness of the fabric, showing lavender flowers on a white ground and the fineness of the plain net in vest and collar, produces an effect of elegance almost equal to that in the elaborate blouse of organdy.

LESSONS IN DOMESTIC SCIENCE

Prepared by the Agricultural Department WASHINGTON, D. C.

HOW TO MAKE A FIRELESS COOKER

In all the talk that fireless cooking has recently created throughout the country, there has been little or no mention of the fact that the principle has been known almost as long as cooking itself, and that its application is within the reach of every household. Every woman who wraps a bottle of water in a blanket in order to keep it hot uses the principle, and everyone who has a bottle and a box big enough to put it in, can make a fireless cooker. Its use means less fuel burned and more liberty for the housewife.

Fireless cooking is a convenient but inaccurate term. It does not mean that one can cook without fire, but that one can cook with less fire. The food has first to be well heated in the ordinary way. It is then in those oughly protected that the heat does not escape for a long time. In consequence the food continues to cook long after the fire is out in the range and the housewife goes about her other affairs.

There are many good fireless cookers—or to speak more accurately, cooking boxes—on the market, but it is not difficult to make one at home at of buying it. The first necessity is a tight box to hold the food. The size of this naturally determines the size of the box in which it is to be placed, between the kettle and the sides of the box there should be plenty of room for a layer of packing to keep the heat from escaping. For example, a three foot saucepan will be 12 to 14 inches in perhaps as easily obtained as any other kind. This may be dipped in a wooden bucket, constructed or holding a kettle capable of containing six or eight quarts. In general, it may be said that for a kettle of this size, the box should measure about fifteen inches every way.

The question of the material to be used in packing the space between the kettle and the box is an important one. Asbestos and mineral wool are undoubtedly excellent, but they are also undoubtedly expensive. Satisfactory substitutes can be had at little or no cost. After experimenting with hay, excelsior, ground cork and paper, investigators from the United States department of agriculture decided that crumpled paper was the most practical. It not only holds the heat well, but it does and odorless, and does not require a cloth lining for the box. Single sheets of newspaper should be crushed between the hands and then pounded down until there is a layer at least two inches deep over the bottom of the box. Then the kettle should be placed in the center and crushed paper packed as solidly as possible all around it, a vacant space about two inches high being left at the top of the box. For this space a cushion made of some heavy goods like denim and stuffed into any shape desired should be provided. If the packing is done carefully and the cushion well fitted, keep its shape and the kettle can be removed and replaced without trouble.

The box should have a hinged cover fastened down securely in front by some kind of clasp. An ordinary clamp window fastener answers the purpose admirably. In order to get the best results the outlet or other utensils should have straight sides and fit covers with close rims shutting well down, but this is not indispensable. It should be remembered, however, that every little thing, no matter how trivial it may seem, which aids in preventing the escape of heat is important.

It is obvious that the "fireless cooker" is better fitted for long, slow cooking than for articles that need a hot fire. It does particularly well, therefore, with cereals and soups—and soup is a valuable constituent in one's diet too much neglected in this country.

Another advantage which the box possesses springs from the fact that the protracted cooking it makes possible does much to render the cheaper and tougher cuts of meat palatable as the more expensive. There is, in fact, no doubt that with a little thought and experience the skillful cook can save fuel and time by fireless cooking.

As in other things, experience is the best teacher. There are however, one or two fundamental rules which the beginner will do well to bear in mind. In the first place it must be remembered that the more heat that is put into the cooker, the more will be retained to do the cooking. The box, therefore, gives the best results when it is filled to its capacity. If this is not possible other material which holds heat well should be put in to fill the vacant space. Several pieces of iron will do the trick nicely themselves. For instance, a smaller kettle containing the food may be placed in the large one and the space filled with boiling water, or a number of dishes may be put in together. When this is done, however, care must be taken to have the food so placed that so that all may be cooked at the same time. If the box is opened to take out the others, some heat will escape. Still another thing to remember is that in the fireless cooker there is no chance for liquids to evaporate. Consequently not as much liquid should be put in as in ordinary cooking.

To guide the housewife in her experiments with the cooker box the department of agriculture tested a new, unpacked box by placing in it a kettle of boiling water at a temperature of 212 degrees Fahrenheit. After four hours this had fallen to 179 degrees Fahrenheit; after eight hours to 150 degrees Fahrenheit.

For making soup stock or broth with the cooking box the soup bones are broken, well split up, or the lean meat should be cut into small pieces. Wash the meat, place it in the kettle, and cover with cold water. Bring to a boil on the stove and boil 15 minutes; then at night if the soup is to be used at noon the next day. Place in the cooker overnight. In the morning remove meat and bones from soup, strain and remove fat. Return soup and meat to kettle, adding salt and seasoning is desired. Bring to a boiling point again and return it to the box and let remain until noon. This stock may be used as a foundation for several soups, such as vegetable soup, clear soup, or noodle soup.

Dried lima beans, peas and lentils make excellent soup without meat. Since they require long-continued cooking, they are well adapted to fireless-cooker methods. These dried vegetables, cleaned with less water and not meat, rubbed through a coarse sieve if made into the proper consistency with milk or thin cream, and seasoned to taste, make excellent "cream" soups. Soups made by thinning the cooked legumes with water and seasoning with onion (first until pale brown), with celery tops, and other vegetables are very palatable also.

Brown Fricassee of Chicken.—Joint the chicken and brown in fat after roiling it into pieces, or better, force pack them in the kettle. When all are browned make a gravy in the skillet where the browning was done. Add this to the chicken with enough boiling water to cover, salt and pepper, and 30 minutes. Place in box over night. Reheat and return to box until noon. This length of time is for a still roast fowl. Consequently if on the farm to a state where the meat will fall from the bones.

Baked Beans.—Prepare a four-pound rib roast as for oven roasting. It can be had more conveniently if the butcher of this naturally determines the size of the box in which it is to be placed between the kettle and the sides of the box there should be plenty of room for a layer of packing to keep the heat from escaping. For example, a three foot saucepan will be 12 to 14 inches in perhaps as easily obtained as any other kind. This may be dipped in a wooden bucket constructed or holding a kettle capable of containing six or eight quarts. In general, it may be said that for a kettle of this size, the box should measure about fifteen inches every way.

The question of the material to be used in packing the space between the kettle and the box is an important one. Asbestos and mineral wool are undoubtedly excellent, but they are also undoubtedly expensive. Satisfactory substitutes can be had at little or no cost. After experimenting with hay, excelsior, ground cork and paper, investigators from the United States department of agriculture decided that crumpled paper was the most practical. It not only holds the heat well, but it does and odorless, and does not require a cloth lining for the box. Single sheets of newspaper should be crushed between the hands and then pounded down until there is a layer at least two inches deep over the bottom of the box. Then the kettle should be placed in the center and crushed paper packed as solidly as possible all around it, a vacant space about two inches high being left at the top of the box. For this space a cushion made of some heavy goods like denim and stuffed into any shape desired should be provided. If the packing is done carefully and the cushion well fitted, keep its shape and the kettle can be removed and replaced without trouble.

The box should have a hinged cover fastened down securely in front. Its some kind of clasp. An ordinary clamp window fastener answers the purpose admirably. In order to get the best results the outlet or other utensils should have straight sides and fit covers with close rims shutting well down, but this is not indispensable. It should be remembered, however, that every little thing, no matter how trivial it may seem, which aids in preventing the escape of heat is important.

It is obvious that the "fireless cooker" is better fitted for long, slow cooking than for articles that need a hot fire. It does particularly well, therefore, with cereals and soups—and soup is a valuable constituent in one's diet too much neglected in this country.

Another advantage which the box possesses springs from the fact that the protracted cooking it makes possible does much to render the cheaper and tougher cuts of meat palatable as the more expensive. There is, in fact, no doubt that with a little thought and experience the skillful cook can save fuel and time by fireless cooking.

As in other things, experience is the best teacher. There are however, one or two fundamental rules which the beginner will do well to bear in mind. In the first place it must be remembered that the more heat that is put into the cooker, the more will be retained to do the cooking. The box, therefore, gives the best results when it is filled to its capacity. If this is not possible other material which holds heat well should be put in to fill the vacant space. Several pieces of iron will do the trick nicely themselves. For instance, a smaller kettle containing the food may be placed in the large one and the space filled with boiling water, or a number of dishes may be put in together. When this is done, however, care must be taken to have the food so placed that so that all may be cooked at the same time. If the box is opened to take out the others some heat will escape. Still another thing to remember is that in the fireless cooker there is no chance for liquids to evaporate. Consequently not as much liquid should be put in as in ordinary cooking.

To guide the housewife in her experiments with the cooker box the department of agriculture tested a new, unpacked box by placing in it a kettle of boiling water at a temperature of 212 degrees Fahrenheit. After four hours this had fallen to 179 degrees Fahrenheit; after eight hours to 150 degrees Fahrenheit.

IN SUCH PAIN WOMAN CRIED

Suffered Everything Until Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Florence, So. Dakota. — "I used to be sick every single day. I had down pains and backache, and had headache a good deal of the time and very little appetite. The pains were so bad that I used to sit right down on the floor and cry, because it hurt me so and I could not do any work at those times. An old woman advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I got a bottle. I felt better the next month so I took three more bottles of it and got well so I could work all the time. I hope every woman who suffers like I did will try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. F. W. LAGASSE, Route No. 1, Florence, South Dakota.

Why will women continue to suffer day in and day out or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, nursing three forms of the blues by illness, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has restored the health of thousands of women who have been troubled with such allments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, etc.

ECZEMA ITCHED AND BURNED

R. F. D. No. 4, Box 55, Holland, Mich.—"My child's trouble began by her ankles and wrists becoming red, and her face, behind her ears, under her arms, and different parts of her body were affected. The eczema appeared in a rash first. It was red underneath the skin. It was red and seemed to itch and burn so that she would scratch and tear it until it would be at least that behind her ears was one great sore so that it would bleed her hair. There was a hard crust covering her neck. She could not have her hair combed at all. I could hardly change her clothes. It caused an awful disfigurement for the time. She would cry when I had to wash her.

"We had her treated for some time but without success. I got one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment and I had not used more than half of what I bought when she was all cured." (Signed) Mrs. O. C. Riemersma, Mar. 21, 1914.

Women Change Subject Too Often!

In the Woman's Home Companion Margaret Hudson Shipp, writing a love story entitled "Sweet Marauder," presents a character who comments, as follows, on women's conversation:

GRAND TRAVERSE PENINSULA IS THE LAND OF LUSCIOUS CHERRIES

Cherry Pickers in the Orchard of W. B. Geary, Grand Traverse Peninsula.

By H. J. DANIELS.

When the West Michigan bike team fate went up the Lake Michigan shore on from St. Joseph to Petoskey a few days ago on their second annual run there was no country that pleased their fancy more than the cherry country in the Grand Traverse peninsula. The harvest was then on and the stalls the "Pickers" saw on every side in that one day's ride on the peninsula was enough to make the most serious under ordinary circumstances forget the Transporting Cherries by Boat.

BIG HUCKLESBERRY CROP.

Large quantities of huckleberries are being marked at various Michigan points. There are hundreds of pickers in the counties which produce the fruit in quantities, and they are found in nearly every county from Bay to Mackinac straits, and in several counties in the northern part of the state.

The crop this year is reported as better than the average. In some localities professional pickers camp out during the entire season, some others go out from towns and villages. Of late years buyers are located at all shipping points, who buy the crop and ship it all over the country. Some of the Lake Huron shore and the line of the Detroit and Mackinac railroad shipments are made from Ossineke station. Large quantities of the fruit are also shipped from shore towns by boat and rail to Detroit and Cleveland.

Along the line of the Mackinac division of the Michigan Central railroad, from Mackinaw north nearly to the straits, immense quantities of huckleberries are shipped by rail. The crop in the region noted this season, including that picked and sold and used for home consumption, will reach an estimated value of $200,000 at a low estimate. The heaviest pickings from Aug. 10 to August 20, but there will be berries until frosts come.

The first shipment retailed in the Bay City market at 15 to 20 cents a quart, but now they sell three quarts for a quarter. In some localities ripe ones are used to pick with, but hankleberry berries command the better price.

One of the best assets to the inhabitants of northern Michigan for many years has been the huckleberry crop, which grows wild on the vast cutover lands. There have been years where one could ride 50 miles in a single day through huckleberry bushes. The profits to the low land owners in Michigan, the last, forest fires have killed the crop. Nearly 10,000 bushels have been shipped from a single station in one season.

POTATO EXPERT COMING.

Dr. Christian Ewert, expert of Berlin, Germany, said to be the greatest authority in the world on potato diseases, will be at Houghton August 17 and 18 to confer with the members of Houghton county potato fields under the authority of the state board of health, and the Michigan experiment station. Large quantities of the fruit are also shipped from Alpena by boat and rail to Detroit and Cleveland.

Doctor Ewert will be accompanied by W. A. Orton, pathologist, and William Stuart, potato specialist of the department of agriculture. Prof. O. W. Oxone, Michigan's plant pathologist, and G. W. Walz, secretary of the Michigan Potato Dealers' association. These men will make a tour of the state in the interests of the potato inspection and certification system which is being fostered, Professor Oxone, county agriculturist, in Lansing, reports.

The general inspection of the potato fields of the state, of which the visit to Houghton will be a part, will serve as the foundation of the inspection system. Meanwhile Mr. Gardner is preparing the members of the Houghton County Potato Growers' association and the other farmers of the county for the visit. In the meantime they will have time to give their fields the attention necessary to insure a crop of corn as they will call this fall, and the same with oats. In other parts of the state the fall rains have been a blessing, especially on sandy soils.

The hay crop, too, is in very large and in such a condition that it assures a good price for farmers in spite of any farmer. It is stated that the hay is from 10 to 15 per cent better than last year. Where alfalfa has been planted correctly, it is always a crop of corn as they will call this fall, and the same with oats. Houghton county is specializing in disease-free potatoes and Mr. Gardner is confident Doctor Ewert will see in that mining country of the North potato fields that will excite his admiration and force him to record to Houghton county recognition as one of the great potato-producing regions of the world.

IS MICHIGAN'S GAIN.

Commenting Gardner's further extension of the general quarantine against Maine potatoes becomes effective.

At the present time and hereafter all potato growers and buyers in Maine desiring to ship potatoes must apply to a federal inspector, and only potatoes duly inspected and certified and packed in accordance with specified rules can be sent out of that state.

This drastic regulation against Maine potatoes is made necessary, so the government at Washington has decided, by the presence of powdery scab, a disease that is destructive in its results, and which cannot be easily transmitted to healthy stock.

"This situation in Maine gives a further opportunity for Michigan to make progress in the direction of becoming one of the best-known sources of potato seed in this country.

Michigan potatoes are known to be healthy and free from all forms of disease. Michigan potato growers have not been wise in the matter of selecting and grading their stock, but our potatoes have been free as yet comparatively from the diseased conditions that have troubled Canadian and Maine potatoes during the last few years.

"This situation, the presence of diseased potatoes in Maine, caught also to provide for better prices this fall and next spring.

It is an ill wind that blows nobody good, and the quarantine of Maine potatoes may be Michigan's gain

FIGURING OUT POSSIBILITIES.

Not much to be learned from the Eskimos, of course, not. Their race, primitive race, little touched by modern civilization, living mile-lives amid snow and ice. Relics are their all of the group of Eskimos, except those which have had long intercourse with the white race, may be classed in point of development with the prehistoric races of the age of ground stone tools.

And this's very far back indeed in the history of mankind.

Yet there's one thing we can learn from the Eskimos.

Arctic explorers say of them that when they have times of leisure in the long arctic winter they invent imaginary hard cases, fabulous indeed, of course, to the replenishing of their food supply, and, by way of sport, discuss the proper way of dealing with such cases.

Fine idea! Thanks to the Eskimos!

Civilized man spends his spare time trying to figure out what he'll do in the event of easy times. He dreams of the times with which he will accept himself when his ship comes in. Literature is filled with references to the "golden days" of the golden future. Everything will be lovely by and by. Life's hardship, no more wants.

And in the meantime the time for providing for such future ease by unheeded.

Would it not be better to imitate the uncivilized Eskimo and picture to ourselves what we would do in the case of hard times? We could then if occasion better to meet such hard times if they came. And if they did we from the usual labor spent in dreaming the plans would be good discipline.

After all, the difference between us and the Eskimos is not very great. Conditions are hard for the Eskimos in their land, but not harder, on the whole, than they are for the average dweller in our crowded American cities, fighting sturdily with hand and brain to gain a livelihood for himself and his family.

Each must fight and fight hard, if he would maintain his position and accumulate goods so that the future may be easier for his children than it was for him. Is it fair to the children, the inheritors of our civilization, that we do not use our imaginations to make easier the way for them?

The Eskimo imagines hard cases and imaginary ways and means of solving his problems before they arise. When the problems come he has acquired knowledge of the best means of solution, through mental discipline and consideration of his own experience and those of others.

It is a wise precaution.

FURNISHING HINTS.

Always try to set a cheerful "the thread" if you would have them hang true.

The living room table should never be crowded with books. A few are enough.

Try beating carpets and rugs on a set of bed springs. They will look as if done by a professional.

If a rug curls moisten it and wrap it around a broomstick in the opposite way from its trend; then tie and let it dry.

Paint the inside of bureau drawers with white enamel if you would have them always fresh and as sweet as clean.

Black walnut furniture or furniture made of any dark rich wood should be cleaned occasionally with a soft rag dipped in kerosene, then polished with another soft rag.

If your kitchen is small and crowded take out the kitchen table and have a hinged shelf made. A shelf answers for a table and can be put up and put down out of the way when not in use.

SOWING AND REAPING.

Remember that the grain you sow shall you reap. The after the harvest is to reap more than you sow. Sow an act and you reap a habit; sow a habit and you reap a character; sow a character and you reap a destiny.—George Dana Boardman.

GOOD ROADS ARE LARGE ASSETS

They Help to Make Money For the Farmer.

BOOST PROPERTY VALUES.

A Piece of Real Estate Is Valuable, as a Rule, in Proportion to the Number of People Who Pass It Daily—Good Roads Mean Good Business.

By HOMER McKEE.

The job of the advocates of good roads is to see the taxpayer and the voter on this proposition. The little that good roads in your county would cost you personally amounts to nothing compared with the amount good roads would add to your net yearly income.

Whenever you show a man that by giving you a quarter he can obtain in return from you 75 cents he is going to spend the quarter. There has been too much sentiment in the good roads solicitation. The tendency has been to ask support for good roads on the basis of patriotism. Farmers have been told that they should support good roads in order that America might keep pace with Europe on a basis of intellectual and industrial commercialism. America is essentially a commercial nation. Good roads, therefore, if they are to be general, must be advanced on a national basis. If the national appeal is to be made it must be on the business basis. The practical phase of good roads is their effect on land values, property valuation. A piece of real estate is valuable, as a rule, in proportion to the number of people who pass it daily. Town property will increase in value as the town becomes more important, as the people coming in contact with the town increase numerically—and that is exactly what happens in a town where farmers can get to it. Good roads lead into a town more wealth coming into the pockets of its local merchants than any other factor, possibly excepting the proximity of a good town. Good roads give country people an added incentive for coming to town and spending their money. If you are a town merchant or a town banker and you want that great wealth of the country divorced your way support good roads. It's the proper business thing to do.

A GOOD ROAD INSPIRES VALUE OF PROPERTY

But of all those who make money out of good roads the farmer reaps the big end. Suppose you own a farm of 100 acres and a road skirts it on one side—one side of it only, let us say. Suppose that road is clay and gets bad deep in the winter. Then suppose the county should change it to a good macadam pike and that your share of the expense amounted to $100. Of course you know the gross expense would be borne by the township on a basis of the total assessed valuation.

Well, I'm fool enough to believe your farm will actually be worth something like $5 more on the acre. The increased price and frequency with which you are now enabled to get to your place of market contribute you an increased security of at least $5 per acre on your 100 acres. Thus by expending $100 you have gained in your pocket, and you will probably have obtained the greatest part of the $500 before your road was in graphic.

Good roads are not a liability; they are an asset. They don't cost you money; they make you money. It isn't a question of putting or not putting up a good road. The question is, How in the world can you get money enough together to do without them? Lack of good roads costs like the mickey. The most expensive road in the world in the one you can't use.

Bad roads wear out wagons, ruin horses, make it impossible for you to get to town when your farm stuff will bring the topmost price, depreciate the value of your land, tend to make you a hermit, to keep you out of touch with things and thereby to make you a poorer citizen and a poorer money maker.

The completion of several transcontinental roads will make a metropolitan man of the farmer. It will tend to make city values of farm values. When the big roads are done you can devote yourself a little more to truck raising, that most valuable portion of the real farmer, and you can get your truck to town while it is still fresh, as well as talk money from your cows because you can haul fresh milk to the creamery. This is a lot better than churning it yourself. It means less work and more money and still less money.

"TAKE IT BACK DAY."

Taking a leaf from the book of the Chinese, with whom New Year's day is the great time for settling debts, paying debts, quieting feuds, etc., the people of a small Oklahoma city have started what they call "Take It Back Day."

Once a year, on a June day to be fixed by the mayor, everybody in the city who had borrowed money in the course of the year and has failed to pay it or given something in return will be reminded summary of his or her remissness and will be expected to redeem the debt. Reciprocal of kindness must repay it to the giver or to another.

As a necessary outgrowth of the "Take It Back Day" movement there is the development of a sentiment against borrowing except in case of emergency.

Applied in moderation, this anti-borrowing movement has within it the germs of a good idea. It would not be well to extend it too far, however, since all modern business is based on borrowing, known as "credit." Do away with credit and you do away with every form of business, even neighborhood exchange or swapping.

For instance, whenever you give or accept a coin or a bill in payment of goods or service you are contributing an operation in credit, since the coin or bill has no intrinsic worth and is valuable only as an evidence of indebtedness.

However—

This idea of a day that shall serve as a general clearing of the atmosphere in a community is primarily a good thing. It wipes out misunderstanding and prevents the long standing rancor which often devolves into open quarrels and lawsuits. If there is a day when everybody must "make good" his obligations to his neighbors no one can have an excuse for neglecting the duty in this respect.

Feuds disorder and quarrels over chickens which scratch up neighboring gardens and wrangling between children and such are all little things in themselves, and they furnish material for jokemakers, but too often they lead to disputes that are not at all little.

Under the new scheme of having a neighborly clearing up day once a year these things cannot run more than a year.

The mediators step in. They are official, since the mayor has decreed that every one shall "get together" on "Take It Back Day."

In an age when men are trying to wearing feathers in their hats it is needless of the women to demand more by a share in the elections.

"If you want to make good in this world let boom times," says John T. Ide. In other words, a "sullenness" taken in time will prevent a sentence.

Hall—What are you doing, Gull—Oh, I'm making a home to have enough to overtake why people don't need to buy a new motor coupe.—Chicago News.

Town Meeting and Court Falling Flat. He Appeals in Big Letters.

A sign on the barn of John J. Figot of Riverhead, N. Y., contains the following in large white letters on a black background:

"A thief is in possession of farms and little livestock. Law, court and reformers are friends of the thief."

Figot, who is apparently an educated man, just middle age and reputed to be wealthy, went to Riverhead from Brooklyn two years ago. He bought a farm on Mill pond, the water rights of which are controlled by the Riverhead Electric Light company.

Soon afterward he complained to the company that his land was being flooded because the water was held back on power. This was denied.

Then Figot filed a bill, invited the public and made an address. He said Riverhead was controlled by a "ring" and assailed several leading citizens.

Subsequently he sued the electric company for $2,000, alleging that his farm had been damaged. The action was decided by Justice Blackmar in favor of the company.

SYNOPSIS.

John Valiant, a rich society favorite, suddenly disappears from the Falmouth population, which his father founded and his family has dominated for generations by wealth and influence. He unexpectedly turns over his private fortune to the receiver for the benefit of his entire creditors, to the business consternation of all old Judge Valiant's friends, who had looked upon young Jimmy Valiant as the most promising of the family. Jimmy's cousin, Virginia Valiant, who is Jimmy's fiancee, is shocked by the news and leaves his office, but not before the first time that she has defended Jimmy's actions to anyone, she says that his father's example, Colonel John Valiant, forbids that he should do anything else than what he has done. Virginia's father, Colonel John Valiant, who is Judge Valiant's second son, is a Confederate veteran who has been living in Paris since the Civil war, because he feels that his father's example, Colonel John Valiant, who deserted the South in the Civil war, forbids him to return to his native Virginia. Virginia's mother, who is a Frenchwoman, is the daughter of a famous French duke, who, because of his sympathy with South and against the Prussians, has been imprisoned by the Prussian Government. Virginia's brother, Lieutenant Philip Valiant, who is a lieutenant in the French army, is in the Foreign Legion, fighting the Moors in Morocco, because his father's example, Colonel John Valiant, forbids him to return to his native Virginia. Colonel John Valiant's second son, Valiant and Shirley Valiant, who is Jimmy's cousin, is a Falmouth man, who discovers that he has a fortune in oil underneath his tobacco plantation, a survival of the position of his family in the old days, and who, because of the tragedy of his father's example, who is sick, and because of the example of his mother, Shirley Dandridge, an opera singer of beauty, is determined to be a singer himself. Valiant, the tournament ball at Jamestown, proves the silver cup, which Valiant's father is crowned King Shirley of his town and Shirley Dandridge is Queen Shirley, determining not to accept money, but without explaining to his family why he is determined the first to meet Valiant, who has been his rival for Shirley's hand, by overtaking her feeling that may well be called love, and Shirley's father, Valiant's uncle, Judge Valiant, has engaged Valiant's uncle, Judge Valiant, has engaged Valiant's father, Colonel John Valiant, to Shirley Dandridge, the opera singer of beauty, to sing at the tournament ball at Jamestown, proves the silver cup, which Valiant's father is crowned King Shirley of his town and Shirley Dandridge is Queen Shirley, determining not to accept money, but without explaining why he is determined the first to meet Valiant, who has been his rival for Shirley's hand, by overtaking her feeling that may well be called love, and Shirley's father, Valiant's uncle, Judge Valiant, has engaged Valiant's father, Colonel John Valiant, to Shirley Dandridge, the opera singer of beauty, to sing at the tournament ball at Jamestown.

The inquiry was drowned in a shriek from several relations. Shirley, who scrambled to their feet, casting fearful glances over their shoulders. The man who had been lying behind the bush had risen and was coming toward them at a shambling amble, one foot dragging slightly. His appearance, indeed, was enough to cause panic. With his savage face, set now in a grin, and his trump-like contusions, he looked fierce and animalistic. White and black, the children fled like startled rabbits, older ones dragging younger without a backward look—all save Rickey, who stood quite still, her wide eaine eyes fixed on him in a kind of blanched fascinated terror.

He came down to her, never taking his eye from hers, then put his heavy gray hands on her thin arms and turned her twitching face upward, chuckling.

"Ain't afraid, is you?" he said with schoolmarmish ease. "Wouldn't skeddaddle with th' like folks whitewashed young 'uns? Reckon you kin, jest fine."

"Great King," Rickey's lips rather formed than spoke the name.

"Hush. An' I know you, too. Go jest th' same look as when pa wants to hit Marse Valiant, an' you jest th' Doms no mo', eh?" Purple as fine as ever, he turned to Valiant. "Guess he make yo another ladyjas like the rest of yo folks, Marse Valiant, ef yo ain't careful."

Valiant's face was a blank. Shirley stood looking out at the man. It was falling in no steady downpour which held forth promise of ending, but with a gentle constancy that gave the idea it could keep on indefinitely and made disconsolate pity poets by the roadside. The clouds were not too thick, however, to let through a dismal gray brightness that shone on the foliage and touched with glistening lines of bright the draggled tufts of the scalped Jimmy grass. Now and then, across the dripping noble, hung shreds of mist wondered, to be curdled in the flooded hollows where, here and there, cattle stood lowing at intervals in a mournful way.

The indoors had become impossible to her. She was sick of trying to make sick of the endless pathetic and purposeless invention of needless tasks. She wanted movement, the cobwebby mist about her knees, the rain in her face, the wet rain upslant, and came down clad in a close scarlet jersey, with leather gaiters and a soft hat.

Emmaline saw her thus accoutered and ventured a last appeal. "Ladyjas child!" she urged, "you ain't goin' out! It's raitin' cats an dawgs!"

"I'm neither sugar nor salt, Emmaline," responded Shirley indiscreetly, drawing on her raincoats, "and the rain will do me good."

On the sopping lawn she glanced up at her mother's window. Since the night of the ball her own gnaping self-consciousness had overlaid the free and sensitive association between them. She had been full of terrible feelings that her face must betray her and the cause of her loss of spirits be guessed.

Her mother, had, in fact, been troubled by this, but was far from guessing the truth. A conventional misapprehension had followed her first sight of Valiant, and she had not witnessed the tournament. She had hung upon Shirley's description of it, however, with an excited interest that the other was later to translate to the light of her own discovery. If the girl's cruel grip till the pedestrian had passed. It was Major Bristow, his spruce white hat on the back of his head, his unruffled waistcoat buttoned with the leaf-shadows. He stepped out briskly toward Dammy court, swinging his stick, all unconscious of the fierce scrutiny fixed on him from behind the dogwoods.

Great King did not withdraw his hand till the steps had died in the distance. When he did, he clenched his fist and shook it in the air. "There he goes!" he said with bitter hatred. "Yer smile friend that sent me up for six years! U break my heart on th' rock-pile! Oh, he's a top-sawyer, he is! But he's got Great King to reckon with yet!" He looked at her suddenly and shook her.

"Look-a-yere," he said in a blazing voice. "Yo remember me. I'm a bad one fer fool with. Yer maw fooin' that out. I reckon. Now yo'll promise me yo'll tell nobody who yo've seen. I'm only a tramp; d'y hear?" He shook her roughly.

Rickey's fingers and teeth were clenched hard and she said no word. He shook her again viciously, the blood pounding into her temples. "Yo aniswin' brat, yo!" he snarled. "I'll show yo!" He began to drag her after him through the bushes. A few yards and they were on the brink of the heathery chasm of "Lovin' Leap. She cast one desperate look about her and shut her eyes. Somehow her about the waist he loosed over and held her out in wide-set as if she had been a kitten. "Ye ain't seen mee hey yer? Promise, or over yer go. Ye don't look so pretty lyin' down there layin' down there on them rocks!"

The shock of the fall was paralyzing and she had begun to tremble like a leaf, but her eyes remained closed. "Yes—have," she contrived deliberately.

Her eyes opened. She turned one shuddering glance below, then her imaginative books, she clutched his arm and broke into wild supplications. "I promise, I promise!" she cried. "Oh, don't let go! I promise!"

He set her on the solid ground and released her, looking at her with a sneering laugh. "Now we'll see of yo behave here or up to Hollyhold Acres." he said. "Fine folks hoops their promises, I've heard tell."

Rickey leaned on him a moment shaking; then she burst into a passion of sobs and with her face averted ran from him like a deer through the bushes.

CHAPTER XXX.

In the Rain.

Shirley stood looking out at the rain. It was falling in no steady downpour which held forth promise of ending, but with a gentle constancy that gave the idea it could keep on indefinitely and made disconsolate pity poets by the roadside. The clouds were not too thick, however, to let through a dismal gray brightness that shone on the foliage and touched with glistening lines of bright the draggled tufts of the scalped Jimmy grass. Now and then, across the dripping noble, hung shreds of mist wondered, to be curdled in the flooded hollows where, here and there, cattle stood lowing at intervals in a mournful way.

The indoors had become impossible to her. She was sick of trying to make sick of the endless pathetic and purposeless invention of needless tasks. She wanted movement, the cobwebby mist about her knees, the rain in her face, the wet rain upslant, and came down clad in a close scarlet jersey, with leather gaiters and a soft hat.

Emmaline saw her thus accoutered and ventured a last appeal. "Ladyjas child!" she urged, "you ain't goin' out! It's raitin' cats an dawgs!"

"I'm neither sugar nor salt, Emmaline," responded Shirley indiscreetly, drawing on her raincoats, "and the rain will do me good."

On the sopping lawn she glanced up at her mother's window. Since the night of the ball her own gnaping self-consciousness had overlaid the free and sensitive association between them. She had been full of terrible feelings that her face must betray her and the cause of her loss of spirits be guessed.

Her mother, had, in fact, been troubled by this, but was far from guessing the truth. A conventional misapprehension had followed her first sight of Valiant, and she had not witnessed the tournament. She had hung upon Shirley's description of it, however, with an excited interest that the other was later to translate to the light of her own discovery. If the band. "Don't you," she burst in a paroxysm of pashing: "don't you even speak her name! If you do, I'll kill you!"

Its force was her leap that he fell back a step in sheer surprise. Then he laughed loudly. "Why, yo little spitfire!" he grinned.

He leaned suddenly, gripped her wrist and overlaid her mouth lightly with his palm, dragged her behind a clump of dogwood bushes. A heavy step was coming along the wood-path. He held her motionless and breathless.

"Thoroughly Shaken Up."

thought had flitted to her that fate might hold something deeper than friendship in Shirley's acquaintance with Valiant, it had been of the vagguest. His choice of her as Queen of Beauty had seemed a natural boon ago to that swift and unflinching act by which had saved his life. Those was in her mind a more obvious explanation of Shirley's altered demeanor. "Perhaps it's Chilly Lusk," she had said to herself. "Have they had a foolish quarrel, I wonder? Ah, well, in her own time she will tell me."

* * * * * * *

There was some relief to Shirley's overcharged feelings in the very discomfort of the drenched weather the sucking pull of the wet clay on her boots and the flirt of the drops on her cheeks and hair. She thrust her dog-skin gloves into her pocket and held her arms outstretched to let the wind blow through her fingers. The moisture clung in damp wreaths to her hair and rolled in great drops down her coat as she went.

The vibrant most secluded walks had always drawn her most and she instinctively chose one of those today. It was the road whereon squatted Mad Anthony's whitewashed cabin. "Daft" as man alive look in her eyes, honey, an gwine make 'em cry sa cry." Mad Anthony's delicacy of that day, when he had read her fortune, but love the quavering prophecy came back to her with a shivering sense of reality. "Po' dab's fish on she sin' afeah'd, an dab's wetah on she sin' afeah'd. Ef's de thing whut out de heart comes de broke—dat wun she afeah'd of!" If it were only fire and water that threatened her!

She struck her hands together with an inarticulate cry. She remembered the lush in Valiant's eyes as they had planted the roses, the characteristic gesture with which he tossed the wavy hair from his forehead—how she had uncured the daisies and the pea cock and chosen the spots for his flowers; and she smiled for such moments, even in the stabbing knowledge that these dear trivial things could never belong to her in the future. She tried to realize that he was gone from her life, that he was the one man on earth whom to marry would be to strike to the heart her love and loyalty to her mother, and she said this over and over to herself in varying phrases.

"You can't! No matter how much you love him, you can't! His father deliberately ruined your mother's life—never one mother! It's bad enough to love him—you can't help that. But you can help marrying him. You would hate yourself. You can never kiss him again, or feel his arms around you. You can't touch his hand. You couldn't even see him. Not if it broke your heart—your mother's heart was broken!"

She had turned into an unbeaten way that ambled from the road through a track of tall oaks and pines, scarce more than a bridle-path, winding aimlessly through bracken-strewn glades so dense that even the wild roses had not found them. In her misery she had always fled to the companionship of the trees. She had known them every one—the black gum and pale dogwood and gnarled hickory, the prickly-balled "buttonwood," the lowly mulberry and the majestic red oak and walnut. They had seemed friendly and pitying counselors, standing about her with arms outstretched, now, with the rain weeping in soothing gusts through them, they offered her no comfort. She sobbed, blindly threw herself face down on the soaked moss.

"Oh, God!" she cried. "I love him so! And I had only that one evening. It wasn't even fair. If I could only have him, and suffer some other way! He's suffering, too, and it isn't our fault! We neither of us harmed anyone! He isn't responsible for what his father did—why, he hardly knew him! Oh, God, why must it be so hard for us? Millions of other people love each other and nothing separates them like this!"

Shirley's warm breath made a little fog against the starved moss. She was scarcely conscious of her wet and stinging clothes and the soaked strands of her hair. She was so wrapped in her desolation that she no longer heard the sound of the pattering rain and the wet swishing of the bushes—parting now to a hurried step that fell almost without sound on the spongy forest soil. She started up suddenly to see Valiant before her.

He was in a somewhat battered walking suit of brown khaki, with a leather belt and a felt hat whose brim, slit with the wet, was curled down

"Doesn't That Prove What I Say?" He Said, Bending Toward Her.

"Monthly nash up all dat mintfuls bad Ah fear?" he said. "But it do so good, Majah, Ah's sho' 'feahed sumpin' gwineter happen."

Her mouth opened under soiled "What foot-leaves got under your wood pow? Been seeing Mad Anthony again, I'll bet a dollar."

Uncle Jefferson swallowed once or twice with seeming difficulty and turned the gravel with his toe. "Ya'ts dat, Ah reckon—mebbe dat dons sas de odd was de yuddah day 'bout ef. Ain't ya know? He sez Majah Lincoln ce trouble ce gwine. Ya ceen dat nigh de bosscaw drop offun de stalks do, an dis ve'y mawnin' ar bubb done fo inter de house. Dat's mighty bad hoodoo, or mighty bad hoodoo."

"Shucks!" said the major. "You're as loony as old Anthony, with your superstitions. If your Marse John's been out all day I reckon he'll turn up before long. I'll wait for him a while. He started in, but paused on the threshold. "Did you say—shucks, mint, and all gone, Uncle Jefferson?"

The Deity of Christ

By REV. HOWARD W. POPE
Superintendent of Men
Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

(TEXT—I and the Father are one. John 10:30.)

I. Prophecies relating to Christ which were uttered hundred years before he was born. (Ps. 16:9-11; 22:1, 8; 69:18; Isaiah 7:14; 9:1-6; 9:11, 13.) These prophecies foretell where Christ should be born, the family of which he should be born, the way in which he should be received (a way entirely different from what would be expected), his death and the precise manner of it, his burial with all the accompanying circumstances, his resurrection, ascension, and final victory.

II. The New Testament ascribes to Christ divine titles which the Old Testament applies to God (Heb. 1:8). "But of the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever." In John 20:28, Thomas answered and said unto him, "My Lord and my God," and Jesus did not rebuke him.

III. In Heb. 1:3, 10, the creation of the world is ascribed to Christ. In Acts 20:28 we have the expression, "The church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood." Heaven's gate opens! Christ shed the blood of Christ as the blood of God himself.

IV. Jesus distinctly claims to be equal with God, and to be entitled to the same honor and adoration. He also assumes divine authority and power. "I and the Father are one" (John 10:30). "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father" (John 14:9). When the high priest asked him on his trial if he were the Christ, the Son of the Blessed, Jesus answered, "I am; and ye shall see the Son of man sitting at the right hand of power, and coming with the clouds of heaven" (Mark 14:62).

V. John 10:33 shows that Jesus Christ was put to death by the Unitarians of his day. "Jew Jesus answered him, for a good work we stone thee not, but for blasphemy; and because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God."

VI. The position which many take that Jesus is simply a good man, but not divine, is untenable. Either he was what he claimed to be, or else he was the greatest impostor the world has ever seen. That he was not an impostor is demonstrated by two things. First, his resurrection from the dead, which is the best attested fact in history. Secondly, that he was not an impostor is shown by the influence which his life and teachings have had on the world, transforming the lives of millions, making bad men good, and turning men from wallowing drunkards and murderers and liars, times into noble men and honest men, cutes out of idolatry and sin into the light and liberty of the gospel.

VII. Prove to the world that Jesus was thoroughly sincere in all that he said, but that he was mistaken and simply imagined himself to be the Son of God. They refer to what they call the consistency of his teaching, as for instance in his testimony, "I and my Father are one," and in another place, "The Father is greater than I." They say that he cannot be one with God and at the same time inferior to God. A young man once asked this question in the inquiry room and the preacher said to him, "Suppose that you had been born on earth when Jesus was here and had heard him make these contradictory statements and he said to you, him, saying, 'Master, I do not quite understand. A little while ago you said, 'He that hath seen me hath seen the Father' and now you say, 'My Father is greater than I.'" And suppose he had said in reply, 'My child, what if, for the purpose of your redemption from sin, I voluntarily laid aside my divine glory and consented myself to be born of a woman, thus limiting my being to the conditions of your nature that I might, in that nature, offer to God such a sacrifice for sin as would enable me to proclaim forgiveness of sins to the world?' I am indeed one with the Father; but for purposes of atonement I have voluntarily assumed an inferior position, that I might thus take your place and die, which I could not do if I were equal with the Father, coordinate place, yea, and your very nature. Thus I sustained speak of my eternal relation to God, and sometimes of my relation to him as the mediator of the covenant of grace to redeem."

He listened attentively and then said, "Did Christ ever make such an explanation?" He was asked to read "Philippians 2:5-8. He read it and said, Wonderful! Wonderful! Yes, the Son of God made himself of no reputation for me, and took my nature, and died on the cross for me!" Then looking up he said, "What have I got to do to be saved?"

"Accept him; believe on him, and confess him as your Savior."

"Is there any place in the Bible the preacher turned to Romans 10:9 and read, "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."

"Do you see that?" He took the book and read it aloud, and then said: "I do believe in my heart that God raised him from the dead, and I do acknowledge him as my Savior."

WHAT IS THE CASSUS BELLI?

The war in Europe is the crime of the century.

Never was a war more unjustified.

The most careful analysis of the "interlocking" policies of the nations of Europe cannot answer anything but pride and territorial greed as the motive.

The German emperor has torn up a treaty that bore his own signature; he has invaded territory the neutrality of which has been guaranteed by the Powers; he has defied all the other signatory powers and ruthlessly crushed a weaker power which bravely challenged his invasion as an abrogation of the laws of the nations.

The Kaiser is war mad.

The German war lord has manifestly been a student of Roman history. He would imitate Cæsar. But Cæsar fell, and with him the Roman empire. His armies are now decimated near the field of Waterloo. Will history repeat itself?

With Great Britain, France, Belgium Russia and Portugal against him the justice of Almighty God must overtake him. Already the "woods of Dunsinane" are moving toward him and he cries out for food.

Will the empire founded by the grandfather be wrecked by the grandson?

BAYLISS SAYS HE'S THE ORIGIN AL WET CANDIDATE

Kewanna Herald:

Joseph H. Bayliss, of Sault Ste. Marie, candidate for congress in this district, spent Sunday in Kewanna and continued here his effort that he has inaugurated the district, to inject the "wet" and "dry" question into his campaign. In roasting the "dry" enemies of the lower peninsula he has posed as a "dry" leader, while in the northern counties he insists that he is the only one of the "wet" forces. In Kewanna on Sunday he asserted that he was the candidate of the "wet" forces in the battle for votes as Scott, his opponent was a "dry" advocate, offering to prove the claim by the assertion that Scott, will carry Charlevoix county, which is one of the "dry" counties in the lower peninsula end of the district.

In addition to making that assertion freely about the streets, Mr. Bayliss attended the ball game in the afternoon and confided the same information to fans at the game.

Bayliss is making a desperate effort to inject the "wet" and "dry" issue into his campaign and it would appear that the district is claiming to be a "dry" where the "dry" forces are in control and a leader of the "wet" when in a community where "wet" sentiment is strong.

Special Notice to the Teachers and Pupils of Charlevoix

Prof. Babbitt has invented and patented a piano music holder which has eight different friction adjustments; may be adjusted higher than the usual position, to set low, vertically, or down to the key-board or tilted to any desired pitch. These that have become acquainted with the merits of the new invention and have bought samples, heartily endorse and recommend it, as it eliminates the strain on the eyes. Especially adapted for Sight Reading.

Prof. Babbitt has organized a stock company and are manufacturing the piano music holders. A shipment has arrived and will be introduced in the homes of the teachers and pupils.

Wasted Beauty

I thought when first I saw your face
How beautiful and fair you were,
And I was pleased to claim a place
Your admiring worshiper.
Your lustrous hair, your dainty dress,
Your lustrous eyes, your skin so clear;
But I'm unhappy, I confess,
You're chewing gum right in my ear.

I'm not unmindful of your charms,
I know you have a winning smile
The combined beauty of these seems
Is something that I admire awhile
But it's a fact, as everybody knows,
That gum is not in keeping with Venus de Vere,
But, gosh, you've gone and spoiled it all
By chewing gum right in my ear!
—Detroit Free Press.

Then the Scandal Came Out.

"I don't believe in talking about other people behind their backs," she said.

"Neither do I," replied her friend; "that's why I listen to what is said about other people behind their backs."

"Have you heard the latest rumor about Mrs. Gladwyn?"

"Why, what is it?"—Chicago Record-Herald.

He Knew the Answer.

The sufferers stood grim and firm,
The crowd around harangued,
And manfully came in
To settle the question that long has been
A man. That's a fine answer
Advanced the shortest wretch,
Who'd in his fight been winning,
Went forth to spell this Parthian shaft:
"Pa will with us, pa's a fearful
Your wife I have the misery got—Poor lady, just get married."
—Livingston Lance.

A Difficult Case.

Fullest—You are worried about my nose, doctor. I can see it in your face.

Doctor—No-o, not exactly.

Fullest—Well on the truth, doctor. I want to know just what you think.

Doctor—Well, to be quite exactly with you, I was worrying about your bill. You haven't paid me a cent in two years.—Puck.

BAYLISS' LEGISLATIVE RECORD

From an examination of the legislative journal we are able to find but two bills introduced by Mr. Bayliss, the candidate for Congress from the district. The first bill provided that members of the State Central Committee should be chosen at the Primary Election instead of in convention. This bill passed and was declared illegal by the Attorney General. The other bill he introduced related to the management of Telephone Companies; how one telephone company could sabotage another, etc. This bill we understand was being supported and sanctioned by the Bell Telephone and other large telephone corporation in the state. Both Mr. Hinkley of Petoskey and Mr. Mc Millan voted against the bill in the House and the bill was killed in the Senate.

CHAUTAUQUA WEEK

The big Chautauqua tent was raised on the school grounds Tuesday afternoon, and the big Chautauqua week is on. Mr. Horace Ellis, the superintendent, is here directing operations. A word about this official will not be amiss.

Horace Ellis, one of the prominent educators of the West, has devoted much time to Chautauqua—both as lecturer and superintendent. He knows the business from start to end, and will be zealous of the wishes of the patrons of the Belgian Chautauqua. Mr. Ellis is now the republican candidate for superintendent of public instruction of the State of Illinois.

Dr. Ellis is president of Vincennes University, and even the tool mice, who drive stakes and "carry water for the animals," are university students, who are gaining their higher education by summer Chautauqua work. The big tent, to some people, suggest special notice, but the outfit, from superintendent to tent-man, would honor your home and your body.

Programs are available everywhere. The SENTINEL has a supply for distribution.

"Traverse City Record: Raspberries and blackberries were never known to be more plentiful than they are this year. Hundreds of people visited the berry patches last week and many have planned to visit them again this week. Those who have been to the berry fields say it is no trouble to fill a twelve quart pail in a few hours. People leaving the city at noon return home in the early part of the evening with from twelve to twenty quarts of berries. Our very noticeable thing is that the berries are larger this year than for several seasons past.

Western Michigan's largest, finest, and most profitable cherry crop has been marketed. In most cases the results are satisfactory, although here and there are fruit growers, who for one reason or another, failed to obtain the maximum of benefits. The crop was the largest in the history of the region, because of the thousands of acres of new orchard that were in bearing for the first time. The Oceana, Bonnie, Leelanau and Grand Traverse crops wese especially large. It is estimated that the total harvest for Western Michigan for 1914 amounted to one thousand carloads, or about 700,000 cases, which is but little less than the total for the entire state for the last season year. The cherry yield will increase rapidly for the next ten years, because of the many new orchards, particularly in the counties of Benzie, Leelanau, Manistee and Grand Traverse.

Advances from Waukesha, Wis., state that an operation was performed on John O'Neill Tuesday, which was successful, and that the patient was doing well.

Mrs. James Gaskin Jr. entertained a number of her friends at a porch party Tuesday afternoon. Dainty refreshments were served and a good time enjoyed by all.

Charlevoix is especially favored this week by the presence in town of Rev. Dr. Putnam, of Ludington, and Rev. Dr. Ryskop, of Hudson—both former pastors of the Charlevoix Congregational church. They are being welcomed by a large circle of friends.

Rev. Frank H. Bachelor, pastor of the first Baptist church of Ann Arbor, is a guest at the Bartlett House. He is accompanied by his wife. Mr. and Mrs. Goodrich of Ann Arbor and A. L. Gregory and wife of Ashtabula, Ohio, are also registered at the Bartlett.

In recognition of the good work done by the firemen last Saturday night several liberal contributions have been made to the department's treasury, for which the firemen wish to express their thanks. The writer of this was on the ground with the crowd, and heard many words of praise from prominent city people, for the efficient work done.

The West Michigan pike will next year have a complete routing in the Automobile blue book, according to an announcement received by Louis H. Conger, secretary of the Muskegon Chamber of Commerce and of the Pike association, from John P. Dyke, publisher of the Blue Book, who has just completed a trip over the route. The Blue Book automobile was in Charlevoix Saturday last.

A rescue occured here last Thursday that exhibited a degree of courage that calls for special commendation. As the Steamer Beaver laid at her dock just before her leaving for the Island, a child of about six years of age fell from the dock into the lake. Clare Coulter was near by and he struck the water about as soon as the child did. The child had sunk before the surface but Clare got her and she was brought safely to the dock. The mother who was on the deck of the Beaver, fainted, and was unconscious for some time.

The largest and finest showing of apples yet made in the state of Michigan is being planned by the Western Michigan Development Bureau for the Great-er Michigan Fair scheduled for Grand Rapids for the first week in September. Between four and five hundred bushels of the best apples obtainable in the Western Michigan orchards will be secured, and each variety pick-1 and sent to storage as it ripens. These apples will be arranged side one big basin that will strike the visitor to the fair between the eyes, causing him to all but fall over backward.

In addition to the big showing of apples, the Development Bureau is arranging a much larger and more attractive display of fruit in glass than has ever before been put up, and its field men are now scurrying over the Western Michigan country in search of grains and grasses that are of exceptional height and in prime condition. These grains and grasses, along with the fruits in glass will be used for trimmings in connection with the display of apples. The fruit in glass will be placed to a large extent grapes which will form a sort of crown to the apple mass.

MILITARY CAMP OF COMPANY "X"

Military Camp at Loveday Point Named "Camp Smith" in Honor of Major W. A. Smith, of Charlevoix

(Staff Journal Correspondence)

On Saturday night last Company X for the first time went into military camp at Loveday Point, and the boys were given their taste of real military life. The camp was named "Camp Smith" in honor of Maj. Wm. A. Smith, editor of the Charlevoix Sentinel.

On arrival at the Camp grounds, tents were pitched, wood gathered, mattress packed, and Loveday Point at once took on the appearance of an armed camp, much to the surprise of some of the citizens, who, unaware of real conditions attempted to cross the guard lines, when they had a challenge of the sentry emphasized by a threatening bayonet, convinced him that he was in the vicinity of real military life.

At the bugle call "Taps" preparations were made for turning in, and at "Taps" everything was quiet in for the night.

Promptly at 5:00 o'clock a. m. the bugle sounded "Reveille" and every man reported for roll call. Two of the number reported with colds for duty and were at once placed in the hospital.

After morning mess Company A once fell in and marched to the parade ground where "Guard mount" was executed.

On returning to camp after enlisting and other exercises, at about 9:00 o'clock the bugle sounded "Mess" and the mess line included a number of visitors from the city.

After mess, sentries were again posted, and at 2:30 the Company again fell in for drill. At the parade ground skirmish work was taken up and the carnivorous displayed by the boys in this work in the intense heat, fully convinced the writer that Company X, if called into active service, would be a foe to be reckoned with.

After returning, preparations were made for breaking camp; the Company arriving in town before dark. The "Camp" was voted by everyone a great success, and has left a true military spirit in the Company.

The skirmish work and drill were preparatory to work given during the Fair, and particularly the "Big Sham Battle" given the last day of the Fair. So enthusiastic were the boys over the Camp that they have decided to again go into camp Sept. 5th, for two days.

During the time in camp discipline was perfect and perfect order was observed, making "Company X's First Camp" one that will long be remembered by the boys.

THE REPATH CHAUTAUQUA

Tuesday night closed the week of Charlevoix Chautauqua revelry—if we use the term because the citizens of Charlevoix and those who transiently dwell within our gates have reveled in a week of unalloyed intellectual glutton. The event has given Charlevoix a pronounced impulse in the direction of higher thought and culture.

In was a week of great day and night sunshine, consisting of a combination of both of pure gold. There was not a number that required an excuse.

For the first, the opening sunshine in the concert of Chaumpagne excellence was the Kryl band Sunday afternoon and evening. This great organization of thirty men, under the direction of a matchless master, lifted two great souls into a trance that had excluded every thought of war, pretience, bigotry of living or politics. That single hour on one Indian weighed a ton at times and then drew but a sweetly blended breath from the brazen throats and mellow reeds. The writer has heard many bands of national renown—Gilmore in the long ago, then Sousa, Innis and the marine band, and Kryl is a towering peak in the range of the skyjpiercing musical range.

"Twelfth Night" by the Ben Greet players, Friday night, gave us an exhibition of scholarly Shakespearian interpretation, and was one of the great numbers of the course.

In short all the numbers on the week's program vied with each other in inspiring intellectual and high judgment.

Shall we have the Chautauqua again next summer? Emphatically yes. It is worth all it costs. It is an investment that yields substantial increment. After what we have enjoyed this summer, next summer would be a dismal season of unremitting labor without the recompense that cheers the soul.

To illustrate the contemptible nature of some of the politics that have been hatched in Charlevoix, we refer to the charge of a local paper that Senator Scott behaved himself in an unseemly manner during the recent Elks' convention at Petoskey. Senator Scott was at Petoskey but one afternoon and evening. During that evening Mr. Scott was the honored guest of Mr. Hemenway, chairman of the Elmhurst Inn entertainment committee. We may add, parenthetically, that Senator Scott is an Elk, but the editor of the local paper here referred to is NOT.

WANTED—Potatoes and Apples: Crabs and Dockets ready to come. See Livingston at Dock.

CHEAP SORT OF POLITICS

Mr. Bayliss calls our attention to an article in a recent issue of the Scottville, taken from an Kewanna paper, charging him with being wet and dry according to public sentiment governing.

We assume the entire responsibility for reporting that extract and report that it crept into our columns. We do not believe it is true of either candidate. There has been too much nonsense in this congressional canvass, and none of it can be charged to this paper. But, much to our regret, we have been compelled to take our place in the trenches to repel a most cowardly attack on Senator Scott.

In this canvass we have taken the ground that both were honest, competent, but we have strenuously adhered to the proposition that, Mr. Scott having credibly and honorably represented this district in the Michigan Senate for four years, was entitled to the support of the republicans of the district for the congressional nomination. With us it has not been a question of men, but of good common sense, rational politics. Nothing discreditable has been proven against Senator Scott. He has met every accuser and looked him squarely in the eye. He is charged with having told one editor to his face that he was a double dollar. Scott does not swear, but he owns up to this charge, because the editor did lie, and, knowing the facts, we can overlook Scott's lapse from his usual dignity.

We are supporting Frank Scott because we know him to be an honest, clean and able man, and because he is at this present moment Senator from the district in which we live and owes his entire allegiance and because he is by reason of his ability and his legislative record, president pro-tem of the Michigan Senate.

Mr. Bayliss lives at the Soo. If he should receive a majority of the republican vote, our coat comes off for him up to the morning of the November election, and we shall have nothing to apologize for.

DANIEL F. WILSON

He Had Been Eleven Years in The Government Service in Traverse City

The Traverse City Record-Eagle has the following concerning the death of D. F. Wilson, formerly superintendent of Charlevoix schools:

"Daniel F. Wilson passed away yesterday afternoon at his residence, 401 West Twelfth street, after an illness of several weeks. In all the eleven years that Mr. Wilson had been a letter carrier he had but two days by sickness or accident. He had the record for continuous service, while it seemed he was not strong. This time he has broken death in the portcullis force in all the sixteen years that free delivery service has been in force in Traverse City. Mr. Wilson was born fifty-five years ago in White Oak, Mich. His grandfather was State Normal at Ypsilanti in 1868 and later specialized in botany and physics. He had been superintendent or principal in the public schools of Napoleon, Blissfield, Charlevoix and Frankfort.

"He was married to Minnie Hyde at Charlevoix, January 1st, 1885, shortly after her return from missionary work in South America and four years later they moved to Traverse City.

"Mr. Wilson was a home body and a very silent church and Sunday school worker. He was always either a teacher or superintendent in every place he lived. He taught the men's Bible class in the Central Methodist Sunday school for a number of years and was a member of the official board. He affiliated only with the Modocs in the fraternal orders.

"Beside the wife there is one daughter, Miss Ruth, a mother, Mrs. Abbie Clark, of Stockbridge, and a sister, Mrs. Susie Burch of the same place. The funeral will be held tomorrow afternoon from the house, at four o'clock, with Rev. W. W. McKee officiating. The pall bearers will be from the official board of the church and the honorary pall bearers will be the letter carriers of the city who will attend in a body. The Maccabees and the members of the Home and Foreign Missionary society will also attend. Burial will be in Oakwood. The body will be in state from one until three o'clock."

THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

It seems to be pretty generally conceded that David H. Heineman, of Detroit, is leading in the race for the second place on the State republican ticket.

Mr. Heineman has been one of the foremost and distinctively one of the ablest of Michigan legislators. He has made a record at Lansing that commends him to the people.

The answer, taken great pleasure in endorsing Mr. Heineman as worthy of support at the primaries. Personally Mr. Heineman is one of the most pleasing of gentlemen, and he is straight from the ground up.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT

APPLE CROP AWAY ABOVE AVERAGE

Potatoes Slightly Better This Year Than in 1913. Condition of Corn is Much Better

The crop report for the month of July, issued by the secretary of state, shows bumper crops for Michigan all along the line, with the sole exception of potatoes. In all other departments big increases are shown, average yields and estimated crops being much higher than last year, and in some cross away above many recent years.

The condition of potatoes, as compared with an average, is 88 in the state, 86 in the southern counties, 91 in the central and northern counties, and 100 in the upper peninsula. The condition one year ago was 80 in the state, 71 in the southern counties, 86 in the central counties, 90 in the northern counties and 95 in the upper peninsula.

The yield per acre of hay and forage, in tons is 1.26 in the state, 1.22 in the southern counties, 1.26 in the central counties, 1.31 in the northern counties and 1.32 in the upper peninsula. One year ago the yield was 0.98 in the state, 0.95 in the southern counties, 0.99 in the central counties, 0.97 in the northern counties and 1.41 in the upper peninsula.

The condition of beans compared with an average per cent is 89 in the state and southern counties, 88 in the central and northern counties and 95 in the upper peninsula. The condition one year ago was 87 in the state, 87 in the southern counties, 94 in the central counties, 93 in the northern counties and 96 in the upper peninsula.

As a result of more thorough spraying than in former years, and a fairly favorable season, the apple crop promises to be considerably above the average, both in quantity and quality.

TO THE VOTERS OF CHARLEVOIX COUNTY:

It is the duty of every man who is a candidate for public office to give to the voters before the primary and the election a clear, concise and truthful statement of his position on public matters, what he stands for, and if he has held office, a report of his record I am glad to do this. I have been Prosecuting Attorney of our county two terms. I promised the people at the beginning that I would discharge the duties of the office carefully, diligently and fearlessly. That I would be economical in that our taxes would not be increased because of my office. Being a taxpayer myself I have an equal interest with you in this. I promised that I would enforce the law as the people wished it enforced.

The salary of the office is not large. It has been the opinion of many that on account, taken from missionary work in South America and four years later they moved to Traverse City.

MR. VOTER YOUR ATTENTION FOR JUST A MOMENT!

I had expected to visit all parts of the county before the primary, but at the present time I have no help in the office that I feel that I can safely leave the work in care of and can only take this means to say a few words to you.

Those of you who have transacted business with the Register of Deeds of your county are familiar with the duties of that office, are aware of its responsibilities and know what that office means to the mortgagees and the owners of homes. But there may be some of you who have not had the occasion to consider these things. I, therefore, desire to submit to the voters the following:

The Register of Deeds is not a salaried official, neither does the county pay for an assistant. The county merely furnishes the office with the records and the necessary material for doing the work. The Register's compensation is derived entirely from the people who have occasion to use the office, and in accordance with the amount of work that is required. In order that these be properly served, it is necessary that the Register be not only thoroughly familiar with the records of property descriptions, but that he possess the knowledge of where to locate each of them. Several cases have come to light in this office where, in the making of new abstracts, errors have been omitted in old abstracts, making them worthless.

If you should call at this office and see the number of records necessary to be kept, you would wonder how an inexperienced man could possibly do the same, and yet, I have, for some reason why more prisoners were sentenced during his term. Another reason is, the Circuit Judge is each year placing more prisoners upon probation.

Mr. McWain also wishes to be fair, of course, when he suppressed the following fact. McWain's Personal Bills for his term exceeded Robbin's personal bills for his term to date 1909-10. Why did he not so state, in comparing the expense account of these two administrations it should be remembered that our county is increasing in population and the work of the Sheriff's office increases correspondingly.

One other fact must be remembered: New laws have largely added to the duties of the Sheriff's office and expenses have necessarily increased while the work of the office.

The article by Mr. McWain was intended to discredit my administration of the office of Sheriff. Inasmuch as all my bills were itemized and verified and examined by the Committee on Claims of the Board of Supervisors, reported favorably and later passed by the entire Board, I feel that the voters of Charlevoix county will have confidence in their integrity.

My bills are right and are open to the public and I stand back of them with nothing to conceal.

I only ask a square deal and no concealment by my critic in his accounts and no misrepresentation as to mine. I stand ready to prove the correct statements. Asking your fair consideration, I am,

Respectfully yours,
F. P. ROBBINS, Sheriff.

SHERIFF'S EXPENSES

McWain's Personal Account Exceeds Robbin's by $908.49

To the Voters of Charlevoix County:

The following is a true statement of the expenses of the Sheriff's office including bills of the Under-Sheriff and deputies for the years named:

McWAIN'S TERM		ROBBINS' TERM
1907	$3,377.98	1911	$3,419.49
1908	4,540.95	1912	5,097.08
1909	4,915.02	1913	4,679.19
1910	4,000.97	1914	4,410.20
	$16,834.92		$17,606.56

The above statement includes janitor's salary of $360.00 per year for care of court house and as it does not effect the issue, I submit it should not be charged in either statement.

Also another item should not be charged against either administration, viz: "BOARD OF PRISONERS." During Mr. McWain's term of office there was paid for prisoners board $874.65. Under Robbin's term of office for the same item, $1,936.64, or practically twice as much. This item was shown the proportionate amount of work done during the two terms. Deducting the extra amount paid for prisoners board during Robbin's term, you will find that the difference in cost is only $67.07 for the two terms. In this item I have not included Mr. Lamont, August 13th; he omitted to state that under the law, prisoners cannot be sentenced. Of course he wants to be fair by suppressing this fact. This is one reason why more prisoners were sentenced during his term. Another reason is, the Circuit Judge is each year placing more prisoners upon probation.

Mr. McWain also wishes to be fair, of course, when he suppressed the following fact. McWain's Personal Bills for his term exceeded Robbin's personal bills for his term to date 1909-10. MAY FLY ON SILK WINGS.

Linen Has Call, However, For Aeroplane Equipment.

Although to the lay mind the suggestion of a silk aeroplane should be filled with silk wings may seem an unnecessary extravagance, there are certain advantages to be gained by such an innovation which would warrant the extra expense. Not that the latter would be very great. The cost of using silk in a modern biplane would not increase the expense by more than $100 per machine, while it is estimated that it would reduce the weight by about twenty pounds. Such a saving in weight, of course, is highly important.

In the opinion of experts there are certain objections to using silk for aeroplane wings. It is pointed out that while it is superior to linen, which is now used, in regard to strength, it does not stand exposure to sun and rain as well. Furthermore, silk does not lend itself so well to dressing with waterproofing liquids, which is essential in order that the wings may not suffer unduly from the vagaries of the climate.

Various experiments have been made not only with silk, but with every kind of material in existence, including wings—metallic, cotton, transparent celluloid films (in the hope of invisibility), fine aluminum foil (for fireproofness), wooden slats and feathers. None of them, however, according to Engineering in the London Times, equals linen, which when dressed with the varnishing liquids seems impervious to everything except accidents.

The dressings, which consist of solutions of resein, are spread after the linen has been stretched over the framework. Three or four thin coats are applied, and therefore it is trying is to pull the whole fabric together in every direction. When the coats are dry the linen runs into a drum to the tick of the finger and affords a fairly smooth surface, which is sometimes further improved and rendered water-resisting by a coach builders' finishing varnish.

LAVA CUTS AWAY SNOW.

Alaska Volcano Has Been Stripped of Its Mantle During Eruption.

Previous details of the tremendous volcanic activity among the Aleutian peninsula, west of Seward and reaching to the Alaskan mainland, were given by Captain McMollon of the steamer Dirigo, which brought first news of the outbreak.

Observations made by the crew of the Dirigo on July 1 showed that a new crater had opened on the north side of Mount Shishaldin, the most westerly of the three peaks in eruption. Flows of lava had cut a wide path through the snow for miles down the side of the mountain, which gives Shishaldin, cotton, transparent celluloid films (in the hope of invisibility), fine aluminum foil (for fireproofness), wooden slats and feathers. None of them, however, according to Engineering in the London Times, equals linen, which when dressed with

McWAIN TELLS WHAT SHERIFF COST COUNTY

Shows That Present Administration Has Been More Expensive Than His

To the Voters of Charlevoix County:

I believe that the time has come when the people of this county consider that the two important considerations in the selection of a county officer are efficiency and economy—that the taxpayer has grown to realize that the man who will do the county the greatest amount of good with the expenditure of the smallest amount of the county's money is the man, and in consideration of the same I desire to submit the following which will show the cost of the two last county sheriff administrations, together with a number of state prison commitments.

I was sheriff of this county for the years 1907-8 and 10, and during the four years of my administration, there was sentenced from the City of Charlevoix and the circuit court thirty-three men to the state prisons and Detroit Houses of Correction. During the three years and six months of the present administration there have been only six men sentenced from the City of Charlevoix and the circuit court to the prisons and to Detroit.

I find from an examination of the records of the bills allowed by the county board of Supervisors that my four years administration as sheriff cost the county less than fifteen thousand dollars that was appropriated for a previous administration for detective service but not used, and which the supervisors instructed me to use for the detective services, as the proceedings will show.

I find that three years and five months of the present administration have cost the county the sum of approximately $17,014.75, at same rate of increase for next seven months, or balance of term will make an increase of 47 percent. My under-sheriff, W. J. Wolfe, cost the county for the four years of my administration $1,189.94. The present under-sheriff, Mr. Novak, my present opponent, has cost the county for three years and five months the sum of $1,726.88 or $565.14 more, being 50 per cent more expensive, both men residing in Charlevoix.

So it can be readily seen that since my administration as sheriff, with less than half as many men sent to prison, the sheriff's expense has increased 47 per cent and the under sheriff's, Mr. Novak's expense has increased 50 per cent.

I believe if elected sheriff again that I can reduce the expense of the office and that of the under sheriff to equal that of my former administration, and save the taxpayers in the neighborhood of $5,000 during the next two years.

Respectfully submitted,
FRANK McWAIN,
Candidate for Sheriff on the Republican ticket. Adv.

WANTED!

We want about fifty bushels of white beans, also baled hay.
ARGO MILLING CO.

READ THIS BEFORE YOU VOTE

Coming before the voters of Charlevoix County as candidate for the office of Representative on the Republican ticket on the following principles vital to all in County and State, without subterfuge, without deceit, unclouded by ambiguous declarations, with no, would-be means employed as a catchwaker for the embezzlement of power, without fear or begging favor, to win if possible, to lose if I must. The expenses of the State Government are beyond the actual needs of the people and far beyond the ability of the ordinary man to pay, as they are assessed, defying an attempt to contract, deal either proposition. All State institutions should be self sustaining, except for blind, the orphans, the old and destitute and feeble minded. The College course should be paid for by the class who takes it, not by those who can't take it. We need a court in every County to settle all criminal cases at home. All expense of law suits should be paid by the men who bring the suit.

All tax payers should get full benefit for their money. There are sixty-five Commissions and Boards of control in the State, some of them fix their own salary and expense account, one-half that number is sufficient.

One engineering school in the state is enough. We have two now. In 1907 and 1908, two State schools cost the tax payers $1,000,000.00. In 1911 and 1912, the same schools cost the tax payers over $9,000,000.00 above their income. In 1907 and 1908 the total cost of all State Government was $9,078,274.00. In 1913 and 1914, the levy on the tax payers for the same purpose was $11,460,000.00 and $16,759.20 went to Mackinac Island Park.

The State Board of Tax Commissioners is an imposition and insult to honesty and should be abolished. The laws on the whiskey traffic, and especially the law passed in 1913, which is simply a joke, should be repealed and fewer and better ones made. The cause of temperance in my cause and will have my support at all times. Lobbying in the legislature should not be allowed.

Colonization of Japanese in the State is dangerous and should be prohibited by law. Rates on Fire Insurance should be regulated by law.

The brightest gem in Citizenship is woman suffrage. It is coming and should come. The former and the laboring man make the world a living and should have the first consideration. Capital would be dead without labor, neither should have any advantage over the other, but should go hand in hand.

On these principles I stand, and will stand on them. I am not trying to hide myself into office on a broken precedent, nor on a promise to do better next time.

Yours most respectfully,
JAMES M. FILTZ,
Charlevoix, Michigan.

HOLY ISLAND

A Above the firmament and dark
A silent gulf, upon the lake lay
Without a ripple, a mirror stark
Wind-swept and swallow, yet not dead,
As of prowling leopard, south
A troubled, sullen-soul prince
No peacock, so of monarching rich
Unshaken by pestilence disease.

Hardly it says, I challenge men,
I lift up, proud head to the storm,
Hardly it says, I challenge men,
Prince from heaven I took this form.

Of mortal, mortal, mortal sin
Tho Dominion or no meeting eye
Tho I stand and bleed and die
Nor man, nor priest, nor Deity

Never to my help will I cry
This holy sign the sacred cross
And mine is a lofty pride
Of Lucifer, I will be the care
Of Lucifer, I will be the care.

No future dark, that we may dread
Repulsion on the world I stand
Tho I stand and bleed and die
Tho the world I've wrecked

Tho the breast of this fair lake
Cleaves to the storm, no more
Tho the world I've wrecked, make
Tho the world I've wrecked.

Proudly, upon the lofty cross
Lifted up, I stand, I die today,
"I lift man and more forever rest,
Hallowed place, shall hourly be.

DIRTIEST YET BY SCOTT'S ENEMIES

Again we beg leave to revise opinion on the paper taking the palm for low, dirty, political methods. The Eveningers Journal and Charlevoix Courier are in date in this line, but they must take a back seat to the Mancelona News. In this week's issue of the Mancelona News the leading article under the "nom heard" "Liquor Men Tie to Scott and Empson; Decision is Made at Secret Meeting," etc., follows a diatribe, false on its face and maliciously published to try and bolster up the waning political fake that Hon. Frank D. Scott should be opposed by all "dry" voters. This article would be libelous if published in any paper whose words were considered reliable or that had any influence, and the same was so published in the Journal to injure Senator Scott's name and standing.

To republish such an article is bad enough in all conscience, but that does not reach the dirty level of the Mancelona News, for, following the malicious diatribe, without rule, break or head, comes a cut of Senator Scott and one of his campaign announcements, the whole on its face, cooking as if Scott himself was advertising that he was the candidate of the liquor interests!

Any paper that would stoop to that depth of dirty misrepresentation is so vile that although we are credited with having physically "the dirtiest print shop in Michigan," we consider that our shop would be disgraced by such a paper and from henceforth we respectfully decline to continue exchange.—East Jordan Enterprise.

HOW the DEAF SEE SOUNDS

by ROBERT H. MOULTON

WHEN the annual field day of the Parker Practice school, Chicago, were taking place a few days ago, a feature that brought unusually long and loud applause from the throng of visitors crowding the school campus was a relay of fancy dances and drills given by several classes of boys and girls ranging in age from six to sixteen years.

A close observer might have noticed that as the children went through the various graceful evolutions in perfect time with the playing of a piano, they kept their eyes turned as much as their wheelings and swayings would permit in the direction of a young woman, who with slight motions of her hand seemed to be directing them in their movements. The reason for this was not apparent, since those who came to made guests do not need any such form of guidance.

But when inquiries were made it developed the surprising fact that not one of these children could hear the playing of the piano; that they were, indeed, totally deaf, and depended upon no slight assistance given them by their teacher to go through the different measures with the more precision that would mark the movements of hearing children.

To teach this fact alone would have caused the visitor sufficient wonder, but he would have been considerably more astonished a little later if he had chanced to run across a group of the same children laughing and chatting together as merrily and naturally as if they had never known what it was to be denied the blessed privilege of perfect hearing. Surely the age of miracles must have arrived when the dumb can be made to speak and the deaf to hear with their eyes!

But the woman who had brought about these seemingly impossible things do not regard them as either miraculous or especially wonderful. They think it is the most natural thing in the world that deaf children should be taught to speak and to read the speech of others. They tell you, moreover, that the only way in which children can be instructed in the modern oral system, and that the ancient method of signs and finger spelling is still the result of barbarism as the practice of running a frog through the nose to beautify one's face.

This may sound almost unbelievable to those who are not aware of a fact known to one who is totally devoid of the power of speech and who must depend upon the sign language to convey ideas his thoughts to others. Fifty years ago a person who had been looked upon as a freakish one when it had insisted that children born deaf could be and should be taught to speak. Even today the general impression prevails that a person who becomes deaf in infancy must necessarily also be dumb during the whole of his life, and, strangely enough, the lack of power to express one's self in spoken language is ascribed to some defect in the organs of speech. Both of these conclusions are entirely wrong. It has been demonstrated beyond all doubt that practically every deaf child has perfect organs of speech at birth, and that it is a very rare occurrence when a deaf person remains mute for any other reason save the lack of training which a hearing child receives through its ears.

If you should go to the Parker Practice school any fine afternoon you would probably see in the broad lawn in front of the school various groups of children at play under the watchful eyes of their teachers. But it is not likely that your attention would be attracted to any particular group because of anything unusual in their manner of addressing their teacher or one another; all are evidently laughing and chatting in the fullness of their childish delight. Yet the chances are that some of these children have never in their years heard the sound of a voice.

Entering the school you might go from room to room and discover for quite a while that there was anything different in the manner of instructing the pupils in one room from that in another. In some of them, however, you would find the teacher sitting in a manner that you passed on the lawn. If their eyes happened to be turned away from the visitor upon his entrance, their attention would not be diverted, since their organs of sight have to perform the duty of the useless ears. Should they see the newcomer, however, they will smile an affectionate welcome, then direct their gaze once to the lips of their teacher. It is this concentration on one sense which first betrays their physical handicap. All the knowledge they receive must come through the sense of sight, and as their eyes are never on the alert to catch the smallest movement of their teacher's lips.

The original department of the Parker Practice school is under the direction of Miss Mary McOwen, the founder of the McOwen First School for Young Deaf Children. For more than three years this school carried on the pioneer work for the deaf in Chicago, and since 1906, when speech classes were organized in the public schools, has supplemented that work by continue to teach the very young children. There are eight classes, ranging about ninety pupils, in charge of Miss McOwen and her assistants the children ranging in age from five to twelve years.

The caller probably will be ushered into one of the kindergarten classes. Here he will find ten or a dozen contented little scholars seated in baby chairs about a low table, playing at table with blunting colored sticks, or making patterns with them, murmuring all the time the names of the figures they are forming. The teacher talks busily and naturally to the children, but as it her mouth moved in the manner of articulation than spoken language ever being employed. This is necessary in order to develop in the children of children that they shall think and express themselves in spoken language as naturally and unconsciously as hearing children.

Two not unreasonable questions may be asked by anyone whose mind is called to this work—how and why do these children reproduce the speech they never hear? And second, what does they do for the common ideas and words?

Let us watch one of the baby classes. The program suddenly changes from the play with the colored sticks and blocks. The teacher, leaning forward, arrests the attention of one of her pupils, enunciating with perfect articulation some simple word. Instantly the child's expression crystallizes to reveal pure concentration of thought. All the intelligence of the children seems to focus through the eyes on the teacher's lips. Then gradually there germinates in his mind a sense of the mental action that evoked the motions of her lips and tongue as she spoke, and this sense blooms into an imitation of the word accompanied by the corresponding sound. If this is not correct the teacher repeats the word and illustrates to the child just how it should be made. Usually he gets it more and more perfect each time, and when the lesson is finished he returns to his play, smiling from pure joy in the intellectual exercise.

Only the simplest words are given for the child to reproduce at first. These are really not words at all, but mere sounds. When individual sounds are mastered they are then combined to form words. For example, suppose the child has learned to make the sounds of the vowel "a" (ah) and the consonant "m." The teacher now places the child's hand upon her throat, and the child, all eagerness, prepares to imitate her. First she begins with the sound of "a" and, while still utterer it gently closes her lips, but without interrupting the sound. This action causes the sound of "m" to follow "a" and the result is the word "arm." When the little scholar is made to understand to what the word applies he is usually so delighted that he sends her telling it repeat it over and over until he has it just right. Sometimes the position is more excellent, but the sounds are weak. The teacher will then direct the child to see his voice. The meaning of this direction and the way of obeying it are taught in the very beginning of the work by holding the child's hand upon the teacher's throat and chest while she makes utterance of a sound, this hand is then applied to his own throat and chest and he has produced similar vibrations. All until he has produced similar vibrations. All the while, of course, he is watching his teacher's lips and the direction is repeated until he has learned its meaning.

The power to distinguish differences of vibration by touch is a very important thing, for it is the child's guide in acquiring the power of voice inter—in raising it if it is too deep, or lowering it if it is too shrill. Instruments upon this are conducted with musical instruments such as the guitar and piano, and then applied to the vibrations of the human voice. The teacher first strikes a low note and the child, watching and feeling the vibration, then strikes a high note and calls his attention to the difference. Next she places his hand upon her throat while she sings low and high notes alternately, and in time he acquires the ability to recognize the difference in tone by touch.

The making of aspirant sounds, requiring the forcible emission of breath, such as "p," is explained by using a feather or lighted candle. The teacher places the feather or lighted candle in the palm of the hand and the child sees the effect of the difference between a gentle breath and the same within motions, but not in the child's throat and mouth, members of the sense feeling.

"I believe that the steelhead and whitefish are the most beneficial of all the greatest commercial fish of the Great Lakes," emphatically declared Mr. Lydell. He is a native of only about twenty years since their introduction to the waters of this region and already they abound in the larger streams emptying into the Great Lakes.

Unquestionably they are the finest of the salmon family, and with encouragement and the application of scientific methods will propagate amazingly and become so thick in some of the streams that they'll have to swim sideways to get under the bridges. Five years more should see some great salmon canneries and packing houses established throughout upper Michigan, and I am firmly convinced that it will come to pass."

Fertilizer Being Tested.

Commercial fertilizer has been applied to the orchards of the Michigan Agricultural college farm for the purpose of covering with one or two years of the Western Michigan orchards that give promise of production extra fine crops of the best fruit. The trees are large and a record is being kept of the expense of the fertilizer, so that the exact benefit derived from the use of the fertilizer may be known. In the fall the apples will be picked, and as is expected, these will be used for exhibits planned in behalf of the advertisement of the Western Michigan country.

Western Michigan

A Region that is Rapidly Developing as a Fruit Growing and General Farming Section

CLEVER PLAN TO MAKE WORK EASY

William Wilson, a fruit grower who has lived on the north shore of Crystal lake, Benzie county, since '82, and has been growing fruit according to his own notions during all these years, has evolved a plan for getting water for his spraying operations that shows a high order of originality. In fact all of Mr. Wilson's planning is characterized by inventions and practises of his own creation, and many of them are of sufficient merit to warrant their being copied by others who have similar problems to solve. Part of Mr. Wilson's orchards are on a high hill, and he found it was hard work for his horses to pull the dated spray tank up the heights. So on the very hill-top he constructed a stone cistern, which is 9 by 13 feet in size and eight feet deep. Part of the cistern is above the ground and part below. Over this cistern he built a shed, and from the roof run a pipe to the cistern, so that the rain water falling upon the roof is caught and deposited in the cistern. In this way he accumulates a thousand gallons of water, so that when the spraying season begins he hauls his empty tank up the hill and takes enough water from the cistern to do his spraying, and then commences to work downward, spraying the trees as he passes them. In a valley on his farm is a flowing well, and the water from this is used in preparing spraying solutions for the orchards upon the lower land. This is a result of his ingenuity he has secured an adequate supply of water for his spraying operations, which is an important matter, as often it cost much trouble and expense to get it when there is a poor water supply.

WILL GET A NEW INDUSTRY

Michigan to Become Greatest Salmon Packing Center in World, is Prediction.

It has been predicted by Dwight Lydell, superintendent of the Michigan bass hatchery located near Grand Rapids, that in five years the Lake Michigan region will become the greatest salmon packing center of the world, rivaling in importance even the famous Columbia River and Alaska districts.

Mr. Lydell bases his prediction on three successive years study of the habits and characteristics of the steelhead and rainbow trout, members of the salmon family.

"I believe that the steelhead and whitefish are the most beneficial of all the greatest commercial fish of the Great Lakes," emphatically declared Mr. Lydell. He is a native of only about twenty years since their introduction to the waters of this region and already they abound in the larger streams emptying into the Great Lakes.

"Unquestionably they are the finest of the salmon family, and with encouragement and the application of scientific methods will propagate amazingly and become so thick in some of the streams that they'll have to swim sideways to get under the bridges. Five years more should see some great salmon canneries and packing houses established throughout upper Michigan, and I am firmly convinced that it will come to pass."

NALL MAKES AN EXPERIMENT

Tries Fruit Raising on Plains Between Williamsburg and Fife Lake in Grand Traverse.

An experiment is being tried along fruit growing lines on the plains between Williamsburg and Fife Lake in Grand Traverse county. It has been supposed for years that these plains, which have grown up largely to poplar trees since the original pine timber was cut, were all but useless. Mr. Nall of Duluth believes much of the plain land is good, and he has picked out a twenty, just on the boundary line between the fruit farming section and the plains, and has set this to trees. A total of 3,000 trees were set out and of these trees 1,000 were apples, 1,000 peach and 1,000 cherry. Next year 500 gooseberry bushes will be added to the orchard proposition. The trees made a wonderful growth the present season. The apple and cherry trees have produced two feet of new growth, and the peach trees nearly three feet. It is Mr. Nall's plan to give the trees the best of care, and prove to all who are interested that the favored spots on the plains can be profitably turned into orchards. He proposes to leave the land between the trees uncrowned and to grow sweet grasses as can be turned under to furnish humus and nitrogen. If his proposition is a success, and those who have given it a careful study believe it will be, it will bring on the market many thousands of acres of land.

THE INK PAGODA OF SOOCHOW

Said to Be the Oldest as Well as Most Noted Structure of Kind in All China.

At Soochow, China.

Soochow candidates, and the glory was carried off by others. So, a third pagoda was built, this time in the shape of a Chinese stack of ink. An idol was placed in the pagoda, and the report circulated that the gods were well pleased with the ink that was thus furnished to go along with the pens. The next candidates from Soochow were more successful. Not only did one of our two were elected to seats of high honor. After that the pagodas became an object of great veneration. The number of sacrifices to the ink god increased, and today the Ink Pagoda is the most noted landmark in all Soochow.

MINISTER CALLS FLOCK PIGS

Abusive Language to Congregation Cost Swiss Pastor a Court Fine of $70.

Geneva.—Pastor Korber of Zenen, who is known throughout Switzerland for his militant Christianity, has been fined 70 francs, while his office of spiritual shepherd gives him a certain license when addressing those who care to be included in his flock, he must not treat them to any animals other than sheep.

At a recent public meeting the members of Mr. Korber's flock resolved to differ from him on some local matter, whereupon the venerable shepherd waved his arms and cried:

"You miserable band of pigs!"

This was too much for the dignity of the flock and the matter was taken to the civil court at Lausanne, which fined the reverend gentleman $10 and $60 costs for using abusive language.

The money was promptly handed over in court.

PROFIT IN THESE CHICKENS

Roseomb White Leghorns Do Well in Northern Section of Western Michigan.

Roseomb White Leghorns have been found the most profitable chickens to keep in the northern section of the western Michigan country, at least such is the report made by George C. Babcock, who has an interest in the fine art of Pelissier, in Emmet county.

During the year 1913, Mr. Babcock kept a very careful record of the activities of the birds in his flock, which, at the beginning of the year numbered 113. The total number of eggs laid was 11,000, which was a return of 118½ eggs per hen, figuring the number of hens which were in the flock over at 45. The 50 birds at the end of the year were valued and inventoried at $25 and the 113 birds at the end of the year at $50—a total of $75, which was a clear gain of $2.66 for each bird in the flock. The total eggs sold for $166.82 and the birds were brought $183. The income was value for the year was $11,50, making a total income of $175.68. The total cost of the year's operation of incubator, etc., amounted to $72.66, leaving the net profits as mentioned above.

Good Apple Crop Expected.

The outlook for a good apple crop for the current year is encouraging. Last year a carload of Western Michigan apples was shipped to Manchester, England, after they had been inspected by the Western Michigan Development bureau, and the apples received was good. The development bureau is now planning to forward a much larger number of apples this year than last, and is planning to have its label put upon all apples that will come up to the high standard determined upon. The "Sunnyrise" label will be used upon these apples and will be a guarantee that the fruit will insure higher prices than was paid for common stock. Already the bureau has been broached for the inspection services and as the result go by it is believed that most of the better growers in the Western Michigan country will be anxious to have their apples inspected by the bureau representatives.

Merits of Soy-Beans.

The powerful roots, the acrows and cowpeas to gather nitrogen from the air, the large amount of organic matter they are capable of producing and their beneficial effect upon the tilth of heavy soils are qualities which commend them in the highest degree, to say nothing of their value as feeding stuffs.

Benefit of Mulching.

Mulch large trees or shrubbery which have been set out this spring. It will help to prevent drying out.

RUSSIAN IS AIR MONARCH

Has Built Machine of Remarkable Carrying Capacity and Capable of Great Speed.

The enormous biplane invented by Igor Sikorsky, a Russian, has carried 16 passengers and a pilot on a short flight, and eight passengers and a pilot on a flight that lasted two hours and six minutes, according to The World's Work. Says this magazine:

Aim to use the air fleet, and the body and half are 65 feet long. Besides the pilot's quarters, the airbus contains an observation tower, a wash room and an enclosed passengers' cabin, that is heated by electricity, heated by gas, and furnished with chairs. The machine is driven by four 100-horse-power motors, and with this horsepower has been driven at a speed of 62 miles an hour. If the inventor can develop a 500 horse motor, which will probably increase this speed. Each motor can be started independently of the others, and are controlled from the drivers' seat by compressed air. The great spread of the wings increases the lifting power of the machine. The airbus empty, weighs 2,250 pounds, and it has carried more than a ton of additional weight. This carrying capacity makes the airbus of great gifts in war. The Russian government has ordered four more biplanes of this type for the use of the army. This order is part of Russia's large increase in aeronautical equipment, which already includes more than three hundred aeroplanes and which will be increased by 1,000 more within two years."—Scientific American.

If All the Laws Were Enforced.

A speaker at a convention in Atlantic City declared that "we force the blue decds of mice of statutes now on the books would require a hundred attorney generals, a thousand district attorneys, a million policemen and at least one million dollars." Perhaps he might have made the list complete by adding one million years.

HONEY BEES ARE ESSENTIAL

Fruit Trees and Other Plants Could Not Produce Without Assistance of This Little Insect.

BY FRANKIN JARGEIL

If there were no bees, fruit trees and other plants could not produce any fruit. Alsike, red, white, and alsike clover, alfalfa, are fertilized by bees. Honey is the bait with which the bee is induced to perform the service of these things done that honey is the incidental product.

Anybody can read, but unfortunately, not everybody does. Bees have enough in what they read, and everyone who does, ought to be glad to believe that they can do likewise. That is the chief reason why bees are so desperately slow about taking hold of better things in their favorite business.

Shallow rooted trees are short lived and easily affected by dry weather.

Shallow rooted trees are short lived and easily affected by dry weather.

Cleanliness is Best.

If alsike clover is observed to making better there will not be much trouble with other diseases.

Apples Receive Impetus.

The high price for apples during the last few years has given the fruit growers in the northern part of a decided impetus. Many young orchards are being set out, and many of the old ones are receiving better attention.

Marketing is Important.

It is good thing to know how to raise fruit but one of the most important things in connection with it is how to market it.

IT'S HUCKLEBERRY TIME IN NORTHWESTERN MICHIGAN

By H. J. DANIELS.

It is huckleberry time in Michigan—especially in northwestern Michigan, which section of the state produces perhaps 75 per cent of the state's crop, which is shipped to the cities of Grand Rapids, Kalamazoo, Detroit and Chicago.

Huckleberrying has become a big industry in Westport, Missaukee, Grand Traverse and Benzie counties. From their conversion into sources of supply for the markets. There are 18 railway lines traversing nearly 1,000 miles, or twice the distance from Grand Rapids to New York, touching 458 loading stations. Seven steamship lines touch at 18 points on Lake Michigan and connect in most instances with railroads to the interior of northern states.

A recapitulation of the tools western Michigan has to work with could be drawn out until the list would read like a world almanac.

TALKING OF ALFALFA.

From one end of the state to the other farmers are talking alfalfa, and, what is a great deal better, are beginning to plant it and meet with success. In a dozen counties it has been necessary to organize alfalfa campaigns to get the farmers started, but in one county at least—Branch—the farmers have taken hold of the crop, and are growing alfalfa on a commercial scale. There are now 1,000 acres of alfalfa in Branch county, and the farmers are planning to double this acreage. Many are sowing alfalfa this season. Very few successes have been noted when alfalfa was sown with barley or oats as a cover crop. It makes a seeding a little expensive to summer fallow and seed alone, but the farmer who does this is ahead in the long run.

The acreage of alfalfa will be doubled this season, and in the near future we will see alfalfa as our staple hay crop.

HURTFUL TO AGRICULTURE.

The change in the source from which Michigan and the United States in general is drawing its emigrants is working to the detriment of agriculture, in the opinion of Dean R. S. Shaw, head of the department of agriculture at M. A. C. The flood of newcomers from southern Europe, Russia and Austria, he declared, is tending to the congestion of cities rather than adding to agricultural production.

According to the college publication, 149,700 Michigan farmers are native white, 58,224 are foreign born white farmers, 640 are negroes and 566 are Indians.

The countries which have contributed the largest number of farm operators to Michigan are said to be Germany, Sweden, Norway, England, Ireland, Austria, Denmark and Russia, in the order named.

IMPORTANT RULING.

The superintendent of public instruction of Michigan has made an important ruling regarding the eligibility of those blind to teach in the public schools. TWO BIG INDUSTRIES AT PETOSKEY.

The Upper Picture Shows the Crush ed Rock Mill. The Lower One is the Tannery.

Petoskey has two mills unlike most towns, for the production of chickens of the state. Pepe's crushed rock mill and the large tannery. The one is a great factor to the building of good roads in the north and west parts of the state, Pepe's crushed rock mill and the great money makers of the state, the great money makers of the state, the great tannery employers of labor most of the year around.

farmers have taken hold of the crop, and assisted by the farm bureau, are going to make a great success of it.

A general County Agricultural Chapin says of the Branch county, that the acreage of alfalfa over the county was, as a rule, very good. Numerous fields were harvested the two last years in succession. The raise since the time of the first cutting have been favorable to a good growth, and the second crop will be fair.

"A very good piece of alfalfa is that on the farm of D. T. Bascom, in California township. This was sown on the farm that cut nearly 25 tons. Last year it was cut twice and yielded a very good crop. Its growth now is showing to a considerable extent this season, but it is nothing to be greatly alarmed over. Small brown spots show on both surfaces of the leaves, which gradually turn yellow and wilt. This damages the crop, but if the hay is cut soon after it appears the new crop will come on and will probably not be damaged.

RENOVATING AN OLD ORCHARD

Because Farmers Put So Little Faith in What They Read in Bulletins, Such Results Are Common.

It is not hard to find accounts galore or how old and rundown orchards have been brought back to life and usefulness by giving them a little attention of the right kind. In fact, so run across such stories every few days, but still we are not generally impressed with them. It is the actual seeing of these things done that makes the impression.

Anybody can read, but unfortunately, not everybody does. Bees have enough in what they read, and everyone who does, ought to be glad to believe that they can do likewise. That is the chief reason why bees are so desperately slow about taking hold of better things in their favorite business.

God's Loving-Kindness

By REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D.
Dean of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

TEXT—Show thy marvelous loving kindness.—Ps. 17:7.

"Marvelous" means to distinguish, to set apart. The loving-kindness of God is distinguished or set apart from any other experience known to man. (1) It is marvelous in its origin. Surprising it is strange it is that you and I in Christ today, for this message is addressed to believing saints, who should have been known and loved of God, and called and chosen of Him from before the foundation of the world. In the epistle of Proverbs Christ is personified as wisdom, and tells us how set there as a fountain of wisdom, and how the earth was, and adds, "My delights were with the sons of men."

(2) It is marvelous in its nature, expressed not merely or primarily, in giving to man life, and the means to enjoy it, but when man had turned his back upon his Creator and rebelled against him, in treery and undeservingly forgiving him, and this at the sacrifice of "His only begotten son that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have everlasting life."

(3) It is marvelous in its uncongeniousness. Wonderful is it that God should have loved us while we were sinners, and continue to love us even while we continue to be sinners. "The new man within us was now believed on Christ does not sin, but the old man is still a sinner. But God loves us notwithstanding all, it seems impossible to wear out his love. "Can a woman forget her sucking child?" he asks, "Yea, she may forget, but I will not forget thee."

(4) It is marvelous in its work. Passing from the thought of what God's loving kindness has accomplished and will yet accomplish in Christ on our behalf, consider what it accomplishes within ourselves through Christ, our sanctification and spiritual upbuilding. Listen to David, as with the snows of seventy winters on his head he exclaims to God, "Thy gentleness hath made me great. Or, transfer the thought to Paul, as in the throes of his apostleship he declares, "If we be beside ourselves it is for God; if we be sober it is for your sake. For the love of Christ constraineth us." The love which Christ hath manifested toward us, these are some of the things which the loving kindness of God is marvelous in its grace.

NO DANGER OF SUNSTROKE

Man on His Way to "Get Even" With Enemy Had the Thing All Planned Out.

You'd have known he was a medical man by his looks and by the needle he carried, but the man who dropped into him on the street was too excited about something else.

"Here, sir, what are you doing?" exclaimed the doctor as he recovered from the collision.

"Going to lick a man!" was the reply.

"But wait. Don't you know it's 98 degrees in the sun?"

"I don't care a damn!"

"And that fighting will raise your temperature to 140?"

"What of it?"

"A temperature of 139 means sunstroke and death!"

"Are you a doctor?" asked the man.

"I am."

"Then you are way off your base. The man I'm going to lick works in an ice house, where the temperature is only 40 above, and oh, jossawk, I will make him hollow!"

"But—"

"Oh, I brought along my overcoat so I shouldn't take cold doing it! Thanks, doc—I'm all right!"

Maybe It Happened.

A shabby-looking man and a thin little shaver of a boy were standing with their backs against a wall along the gutter—every one passing by stared over his eyes and a card hung in front of him, bearing the legend, "Blind and Deaf."

The boy had a smile on his face as he listened to the street comments on the way playing "Everybody's Doing It," and then started involuntarily to whistle the chorus.

The man turned savagely to him and hissed:

"Shut that warble off and slide that grin off your face, you ungrateful imp! Ever want people for think we're happy?"

New Use for Germs.

An army officer may have to quit the service because he carries deadly germs in which he is himself immune. It might be a good idea to keep him and let him be captured by the enemy the next time we have a war.

NEW IDEA
Helped Wisconsin Couple.

It doesn't pay to stick too closely to old notions of things. New ideas often lead to better health, success and happiness.

Wm. Cooper examined an idea new to them and stepped up several steps on the health ladder. The husband writes:

"Several years ago we suffered from coffee drinking, were nervous, dizzy, sick, sallow, weak and irritable. My wife and I both loved coffee and thought it was a bracer." (Delusion.)

"Finally after years of suffering we found Postum and the harmfulness of coffee, and believing that to grow we should give some attention to new ideas, we decided to test Postum.

"Thus we made it clear we liked it and were free of the causes by coffee. Our friends noticed the change from sallow to ruddy, sturdier nerves, better temper etc.

"These changes were not sudden, but increased as we continued to drink and enjoy Postum, and we lost the desire for coffee.

"Many of our friends did not like Postum at first, because they did not make it right. But when they made it according to directions on the pkg., they liked it better than coffee, and were benefited by the change."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. Made in the cup with hot water—no boiling. 5c and 25c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

Gallant Mayor.

From a small provincial town in the north Italy comes a amusing piece of story. Queen Helena was visiting the town, to attend the wedding of the statue of "Emanuel Emanuel."

After the mayor of the town had made an elaborate speech of welcome, he handed the queen a glass of champagne and asked to be allowed to drink her health. As their glasses clinked, a drop of champagne fell upon the queen's gown. She opened her pocketbook to take out her handkerchief, but the gallant mayor was not to be caught on any point of etiquette.

"Your majesty," he exclaimed, gravely, "there is no need of that! Every thing is already paid for."—Youth's Companion.

UNSIGHTLY PIMPLES ON FACE

New Sharon, Iowa.—"Two or three years ago pimples began to come on my face and I had dandruff. The pimples made a very unsightly appearance. They were red and numerous, some came to a head and festered and the itching caused me to scratch them. The dandruff on my head could be plainly seen.

"I tried several remedies but they only temporarily relieved me. I had been bothered with the trouble two or three years when I decided to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment. So I sent for a free sample and Cuticura Soap from them, and I bought more. I used two cakes of Cuticura Soap and two boxes of Cuticura Ointment and now free from pimples and dandruff."—(Signed) Clyde Pinebaugh, Mar 31, '14.

False Alarm.

Just outside Sutton's post on the Great Central railway, England, is a station named Hyde.

The other day an Irishman was somewhat startled on arriving at this station by hearing the guard shout "Hyde!" The stationmaster, a German ex-soldier, also shouted "Hyde!" and several porters took up the refrain, "Hyde! Hyde!"

Wondering what could be the matter, but thinking discretion the better part of valor, Pat immediately got under the seat, and it was some time before he could be found him when the train reached Stockport.

ON FOOT THROUGH SWITZERLAND

By CARL SCHURZ VROOMAN

(PUBLISHED BY COURTESY OF SHERMAN, FRENCH & COMPANY)

SWISS—TYPE OF TOURISTS CAUTIOUS VALAIS

LUXURIOUS, EXHILIRATING MOTORING

COMPLETELY—EXPLORING

LUXURIOUS, EXHILIRATING WATERS

IN SWITZERLAND the way to get about the country, if one has the time and energy, is not by means of its railways, nor of its splendid system of diligences, nor yet by automobile, but on foot, and briefly on foot, but, in order to see Switzerland aright, one must use the feet as well as the mule, having no taste for obscurity, lifted up his voice high above the noise of the entire and the star that tourists, turning with one accord to look back at us, passed speedily out of our sight in a gale of laughter.

By this time, suffering more from wounded pride than from blistered feet, we automatically repeated the words of the hotel proprietor:

"A carriage is not much more expensive than the diligence and of course there are many advantages in having one's own private equipage."

This last, the joy of summer were now gone, and, according to our original plan, we departed our pedestrian tour had come to an end. Just when this came to pass I cannot recall, but I remember the gorges and return to the snows and hostile Alpine climate, we decided that it was impossible to leave Switzerland without at least one more glacier and one more snowbath. Accordingly, instead of securing railway tickets we engaged two guides and set off for the Eiggletscherhorn, a mountain which is only 11,000 high, but which commands one of the finest panoramas in the high Alps and in good weather, according to Baedeker, "presents little difficulty to adepts."

Unfortunately, however, by thus starting from a point only 2,000 feet above sea level, we gave ourselves a climb of 9,000 feet instead of only 7,000 feet from the Eggishorn hotel to the top of the Jungfrau.

We slept that night on straw beneath huge wooden benches in an abandoned chalet by the Swiss Alpine club for the free use of all passers-by. As we were drenched from walking all day in the rain and there was heavy snowfall on hand to make tea and heat our canned soup, we were forced next morning at daybreak to get into icy clothes.

There is nothing more dangerous on such trips as this than new-fallen snow which conceals the crevasses yawning in the glacier beneath. We were all roped together and as the leader cautiously sounded the snow with his ice axe at every step, our progress seemed to us painfully monotonous. But when the ice axe suddenly revealed that we were on the brink of a snow-covered crevasse which was a mere trifle wide enough for our guide's precautions were not in the slightest degree excessive, a few minutes later an avalanche, carrying tons of snow, ice and boulders came tearing down about five yards to our right, but so stimulated were we by the altitude and the novelty of the situation that we felt no emotion save a sort of tantalization of ecstasy and awe.

In every direction as far as the eye could reach, was a region of dazzling white—of lifeless, endless winter. We were tired and cold and hungry and wet, but our keenest and dominant sensation was one of exhilaration. A new aspect of nature had been opened to our view. Cold you was, and cruel, in this mood, but incomparably beautiful and pure, and it had led our jaded eyes far from the familiar lower levels. It was with a feeling of exultation that we felt, at least, it had been our privilege to tread these corridors of snowing too, to hear the thunder of the avalanche, to gaze face to face with the cold, and the queen of the Immense Alps, with her court of snowy giants and to enter, as it were, the very holy of holies of this mighty temple of nature to which pilgrims from the plains and the earthbom temple not built with hands, whiter than marble, as enduring as the world itself and reaching to the very heavens.

Tete Noir, each with its own special variety of Alpine scenery. None of these, however, opened up a view that could compare in grandeur of form and mass and mysterious beauty of color and shade with that which stretched out before us as we reached the summit of the Furka and looked westward over miles of glacier, interwoven with alpine valleys and surrounded on all sides by chain after chain of snow-covered, cloud-capped mountains in an ocean of sunset glory.

On our walking trips it was interesting to watch the kinds of people who passed us in diligences, carriages or automobiles; some as they whirled by looked down upon us with phlegmatic stolidity, others with indifference or surprise, but those who realized what they were missing must have sniffed as we drove along, inhaling great draughts of pure ozone, stopping to rest or read, or eat or sleep, whenever we wished, and always carrying with us the exultant sense of personal, physical triumph over this proud old Alpine world.

But we were by no means total abstainers from the pleasures of occasional drives, which lent added zest to our tramps. One drive which we took over the Grimsel pass is indelibly impressed on my memory. Having blistered our feet on the trip to the Grimsel Hospice we limped in ignominiously into the hostelry and requested the proprietor to send us some liniment.

Quick to take advantage of the situation he inquired whether we would not like a carriage for the last of the journey to Meiringen.

"It is not much more expensive than the diligence," he explained, "and of course there are many advantages in having one's own private equipage."

The picture he drew of us rolling along in luxury proved so attractive that we at once fell in with his suggestion.

When our turnout was announced we descended in state, preceded by the porter, the concierge, the proprietor and the head waiter, all of whom had lent their distinguished services in the matter of the carriage arrangement and had been rewarded accordingly.

So great was our consternation on being told that a rickety victoria drawn by a braying mule was our much vaunted "equipage" and so hot-cross was the whole situation that we were too confounded to protest. Moreover, the mule was so much better looking than the horses we usually have made would have been hopelessly swallowed up in the dirty exhaustion of our raft.

Such a ride as that could be had in duplicate at any price. The road twisted and writhed along the precipitous side of a deep gorge through which poured a mountain torrent. This gorge was sufficiently awe-inspiring even when contrasted with the Grimsel Hospice, which is a stone house lot. The court reversed a judgment for the plaintiff and granted a new trial because the trial court erred in failing to serve to the jury the question as to whether the defendant was negligent in erecting the barbed wire fence, and whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The court said:

"We are of opinion that a barbed wire fence is not a nuisance as a matter of law. Whether it is or is not negligence to erect and maintain a barbed wire fence is a question of fact. A person may or may not be negligent in building or maintaining such a fence, depending upon the place where the fence is erected or maintained and the circumstances affecting the question whether such a fence would in any way constitute a source of danger. The practice of children playing about such a fence at the hours of intermission is well-known, and in this case it appears that the lands adjoining the school house grounds had been therefore been enclosed and it had been the custom of the children attending the public school to run from the school house grounds upon the lands of the defendant. The plaintiff and other children had also been accustomed to go upon the lands of the defendant to pick strawberries. It was the plaintiff's intention to go upon the defendant's lands and pick strawberries at the time he was injured. The contracted lines of the school house lot and the fact that his little adjoining such lot had previously remained unfenced were known to the defendant."

BARBED WIRE NOT NUISANCE

New York Court of Appeals Handed Down Decision on Question of Some Importance.

The question as to whether a barbed wire fence is a nuisance was decided by the court of appeals of New York in Burr vs. Green, which was a suit in behalf of an infant for injuries received through running into a barbed wire fence erected around a farm adjoining a school house lot. The court reversed a judgment for the plaintiff and granted a new trial because the trial court erred in failing to serve to the jury the question as to whether the defendant was negligent in erecting the barbed wire fence, and whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The court said:

"We are of opinion that a barbed wire fence is not a nuisance as a matter of law. Whether it is or is not negligence to erect and maintain a barbed wire fence is a question of fact. A

The Lost Boy

TEXT—I will arise and go. . . . And he arose and came. Luke 15:18-20.

One needs hardly to be told that these sentences are found in that "Pearl of Parables," which we call that of the Prodigal Son. They mark the crisis in the career of this lost boy; perhaps they may point the way home for you.

Jesus spoke the parables in this chapter in answer to the Pharisees and scribes who murmured and said, "This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them." Yes, he did, and he does; that is our encouragement and our hope. Let us use the story by way of application.

Rejection.

Nothing the father had was good enough for the prodigal. Some of the rules of his house were too strict, his ways too serious, his home too solemn. "Life is not life—it is not life, and life here, but I will use my personal liberty and be a man. What a weakling is he who cannot endure or enjoy the will of him whom chief concern is about the welfare of his son. God pity the man who scorns his father's love and care to indend the far country. Knowing not that man, if he persists in his willful way wardness and wickedness, it is easy to write his epitaph: "He went out, and it was night," and for such an one there is the blackness of darkness forever. Beware of the first willful rejection of your father, and the first step away from home. The news from the far country may be alluring, but ere are on the downgrade.

Reflection.

The fascination of the far country faded away upon close contact with it; the music which charmed his youth soon turned into discord; the mirage which lured him from home disappeared and revealed the desert; for this prosperous young man, with many friends while he had money, but one friend left and broke, there is not even the shadow of a friend now in a weary land. And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land, and he began to be in want. And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat, and no man gave unto him." One of the awful pangs of sin is this reflection on the past. Of the awful pang of sin is this reflection on the future, when the soul of the prodigal cries out in this reflection, "I perish with hunger." "And no man gave unto him." Is one destitute of all things, when the soul of the prodigal cries out in this reflection, "I perish with hunger." "And no man gave unto him." One of the awful pangs of sin is this reflection on the future, when the soul of the prodigal cries out in this reflection, "I perish with hunger." "And no man gave unto him." Is one destitute of all things

SOUTHERLAND LAST OF CIVIL WAR NAVAL HEROES

Won His Way From Ranks—Served as Sailor When Only Fourteen.

Rear Admiral William H. H. Southerland, the last officer of the United States navy until recently on the active list who served in the civil war and who has been retired, was born in New York city on July 10, 1852, and by the time he was fourteen years old had served a brief term in the volunteer navy during the latter part of the civil war. In 1867 he again entered the service, this time as a naval apprentice, and had served in one and seven months when in June, 1868, he received an appointment to Annapolis as the midship.an representative from one of the New York city congressional districts. He was graduated from Annapolis in 1872, his first service as an officer being on the old frigate Tuscarora of the Pacific fleet.

When the war with Spain began Southerland was in command of the little gunboat Eagle and as the commander of that vessel fought the first naval engagement of that war. It may be mentioned that the Eagle is now in New York harbor, where she is one of the principal units in the mosquito division of Admiral Winslow's torpedo service station.

In 1900 Southerland was promoted to the rank of captain with four years later was nominated by President Taft for the first division of the Pacific fleet. Subsequently he was made commander in chief of that organization in March, 1911, he commanded the revenue cutter service Tuscarora and re-established order in that Central American state.

Admiral Southerland is now a member of the general board of the navy, of which Admiral Dewey is the president, and is also the president of the naval retiring board, which a few days ago was brought prominently before the public as the result of the usual punching of naval officers.

The retirement of Admiral Southerland promoted Captain Charles A. Gove, commander of the naval training station at San Francisco, to Rear Admiral. Captain Gove, who is a native of New Hampshire, is a former commander of the Dreadnought. Lieutenant and a son of the late Captain J. A. Gove, U. S. A., who was killed at the battle of Gaines' Mill, Va., in 1862.

Heart to Heart Talks

CHILD TRAINING AND PARENT TRAINING.

It is perhaps trite to suggest that there is not and never was a child training problem. If parents were educated properly there would be no need of "training children. And, of course, such problems as "to speak or not to speak" would disappear, in spite of Solomon's advice about "sparing the rod and spoiling the child."

The theme is suggested by the convention efforts of the women of a small Pennsylvania town to find out what is the matter with their system of child rearing. These women, unusually intelligent mothers, banded in a league or club for common betterment, decided that something was wrong with the discipline in their homes. The results were sad. Children were disobedient and fruitful and did not progress in health and wisdom as they should if permitted to develop normally.

It was found that there was a great variety of opinion on the propriety of inflicting corporal punishment. Some spanked methodically and systematically; others yielded to the impulse of the moment, awakened by some especially outrageous misdeeds of their children.

All wrong, indeed!

All ex. perd punishment is medieval outworn. It never made a better boy or girl. It has ruined many.

It is not destructive but means must be found to make children obey, for in their ignorance they frequently violate the laws which protect them. The parent is the interpreter and executor of those laws.

Hint—

To fulfill the duties of parenthood properly it is not necessary to beat a child with the reverse end of a pistol or slipper. The little body is not intributed to the care of the parent that it may be beaten if the child misbehaves. Nor, in fact, the disobedience of the child is the fault of the parent and is directly traceable to flaws in the system of rearing a child.

Here is the secret of happy, healthy, obedient childhood:

The time to begin training a child is when it is a week old. Ask any physician or other person versed in the ways of children and he will tell you that even a very young child may be made to understand.

If you wait to begin training your child until he is a year or two old it may be too late. By that time wrong habits may be formed.

The VALIANTS of VIRGINIA

SYNOPSIS.

John Valiant, rich society favorite, suddenly discovers that the Valiant name, which was the principal source of his popularity, is tainted with scandal. Convinced that his father, Colonel Valiant, was a coward, he quits the family home, leaving his father and mother to face the music alone. He takes a position with Bull Dog and Lindsey court, a good-for-nothing institution, and falls in love with Judith Lindsey, the daughter of the firm. An aristocrat in beauty, and independently wealthy in her own right, Judith is proud of her mother, Mrs. Lindsey, who is a Daughter of the Confederacy, and of her father, who died for the cause. Valiant's father, fined for contempt of court, dies of a broken heart. Valiant discovers that he is not the coward he thought his father was, but a hero who died for his country. Judith, fearing a rival in Dainty Grace, a dancer, sends Valiant on a mission to Virginia, to find out all he can about the family of Grace. Valiant discovers that Dainty Grace is the daughter of a Valiant, who married a dancer against the family wishes. Valiant finds Dainty court, and falls in love with her himself. Dainty Grace, fearing the loss of a suitor, which she knows she can win from the victim of Valiant's family pride, plots with Jerry Wade, a Western "bad man," to kidnap Valiant. Valiant is drugged by a cocktail served him by Dainty, and is taken to a cabin in the mountains, where he is left in charge of Shirley, but falls to persuade her to elope with him. Valiant escapes from the cabin, and returns to the Lindsey home, where he is received by Judith, who, in her anger at his absence, had married Jerry Wade. Valiant tells Shirley of his love for Judith, and she promises to help him. Jerry, determined to prevent Valiant's happiness, plots out a scheme to get Valiant into the power of a gang of men who envied the duel to death Valiant had fought for Dainty. Valiant, who is now in love with the victim of Valiant's family pride, is drugged by Jerry Wade, a Western "bad man," and taken to the dance of Mademoiselle Fifi, a former Dainty Grace, who is now the leader of the notorious "Lost Souls." Valiant is rescued by Jerry Wade, who is in reality a secret service man, and returns to the home of Mademoiselle Fifi, a former Dainty Grace, who is now the leader of the notorious "Lost Souls." Constitution Causes Sickness

Don't permit yourself to become constipated, as it quickly poisons the entire system. They are Miss Zoe Owen, wealthy and popular local girl, daughter of Mrs. H. F. Owen, and Peter Henkel, also a resident of Petoskey. Miss Owen had been touring Europe with Mrs. Henry Brown of Ann Arbor, in Germany they met Miss Lillian Brown on the way to France. The last word received here from the party was dated July 27, the Hague, and announced Brussels as the next destination. Mr. Henkel left Petoskey July 18, and word came from him July 28, from Liverpool. He was on his way to Ober Ramstadt, Germany, to visit his birth place, which he had not seen for 38 years. He is 50 years old and carried citizenship papers, but Mrs. Henkel says he has lost them and has been pressed into service in the kaiser's army. The fact that his two stepbrothers, whom he was visiting at Ober Ramstadt, must have been draft-ed, strengthens Mrs. Henkel's belief that her husband has been forced into the conflict. He expected to be gone from Petoskey only a month. Mr. Henkel came to the United States at the age of 17 and has been a resident of Petoskey 12 years, acting as janitor in a number of local buildings. He was six children.

A LECTURE ON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

Entitled

The Religion of Divine Law

by

JACOB S. SHIELD, C. S. B.

Christian Science, and what I have seen it accomplish, have given me the positive and absolute conviction that every disease known to humanity can be healed by the understanding and practise of God's law, as set forth in Christian Science.

Much is said in these days about hardening of the arteries, and high blood pressure. They too are the result of disturbed mental conditions.

COMMERCIAL PANICS THE RESULT OF FEAR

What is true of the human body is also true of the body politic. A panic produces a rigid state in the arteries of trade, in the manufacturing and commercial centers, so that nothing seems to move without extreme pressure. The dictionaries define panic as "extreme or sudden consternation, unreasonable fright." To cure such a condition, confidence must be restored. It was the great story during the panic of 1907 that everything would be righted if only the fear of the people would relax. If all people were Christian Scientists there would be no more panics because they have confidence in the protecting and sustaining care of the heavenly Father, and thus lose the anxiety in regard to their supply. They believe in the verity of the statement of our Master, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

IDOLATRY WIDE-SPREAD

Breaking the law of the First Commandment, having other gods, is judging in idolatry, is the greatest of all evils, and yet nearly every one is more or less involved in this error. Idolatry does not consist solely in the worship of material images. Parents make idols of their children; men worship persons and professions; artists worship their art; students worship earthly wisdom; pet animals and physical endowments absorb the affections; wealth fans worldly ambitions and pleasures often fill the consciousness that earthly joy is needed spiritual thought. These are idolatrous and harmful. Humanity excuses them by calling them "hobbies," and the peculiar results they produce "eccentricities of the professional."

MAN IS AS HE THINKS

The Scriptures declare, as a man "thinketh in his heart, so he is," and on their statements was ever more. This does not mean, however, that man is what he thinks himself to be, for one might think himself very righteous when he was quite the opposite. It signifies that man's being is mental, and the quality of thoughts entertained represent his inclination—whether to the human or the divine, the mortal or the immortal.

Nearly every one in the world thinks more on the mortal than the immortal. We learn to do so in our earliest training. Parents often impress fear of disease and sin upon their children before they are old enough to think for themselves, and those impressions remain and grow unless uprooted by spiritual understanding.

Mrs. Eddy has named the sum total of all wrong, though mortal mind. All that pertains to evil, sin, sorrow, sickness, pain and death originates and have their seeming existence in the mortal mind. On the other hand, all that relates to life, health, peace, harmony and perfection have their origin and eternal existence in divine Mind.

CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS BELIEVE IN PRAYER

Christian Scientists are sometimes said to be a prayerless people. No assertion could be further from the truth than this. Christian Scientists believe in prayer "without ceasing." They believe in keeping thought active in the right direction, in order to expel all the errors of false training, and to regenerate the mental chaff from the wheat, as did Jacob of old in his conflict with evil. We believe we should never cease to acknowledge God's supremacy over all, and His loving and merciful kindness to His children.

Our prayer is not so much in supplication to God for help as in acknowledgment of the good which is already has given. If one had a gold mine, filled with precious metal, he would not think it consistent to pray for gold, but would expect to begin himself to that which was already his. Christian Scientists do ask God for guidance, because we know they know that He has given them the talents, and that their need is only to awake from their dreamy mortal mind sense to avail themselves of the infinite goodness. Christian Scientists try to become wholly subject to the divine will, and to be never alert to evil thoughts which are unlike good. This is their prayer, which conforms to the Scriptural admonition, "Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil (evil), and he will flee from you."

When a Christian Scientist is tempted to think of pain or sickness he immediately turns against it and declares for the allness, completeness and absolute perfection of God's creation, which is expressed in man. He refuses to believe that pain or disease is any part of perfection. This resistance of ungodly thought, if correctly understood, prevents the error from entering the conscious sense, hence it cannot exist. When in this way good results obtain it proves that God, divine Mind, is the healer of all our diseases.

You who can see through the density of mortal mind, and can realize for an instant the eternal perfection which the Heavenly Father has bestowed upon you (though you may prove to have been affected from the age of your infancy) get from your this piece free from disease and pain, for such is the law of good over evil. It is that kind of prayer which healed the impotent man at the pool of Bethesda, and it is that kind of prayer which heals the sick today. The Saviour said, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

It is in the quiet sanctuary of our mental home, "the secret place of the most High," where Christian Scientists affirm God's allness, mercy and justice. There they find the power of Truth to overcome the beliefs of mortal error and the sufferers hear the Truth will make them free. They will rise, and respond in freedom from disease and live to bless and praise the Giver of all good.

GREAT POSSIBILITIES IN CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

When Christian Scientists understand demonstrate the Christ-Science they will not only heal all cases of disease, but will do so instantaneously. At present we are glad even to touch the hem of the Christ-garment. We are still like the children who demonstrate the simpler degrees of mathematics.

CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS AND THE BIBLE

Christian Scientists love the Bible. They declare it to be the book of all books, as it is the book of life. Its inspired pages contain the message of all being. All that pertains to Christian Science Mrs. Eddy gleaned from divine inspiration and the Bible. She found that the Bible had a threefold meaning, one the literal or material, and the other the spiritual. This discovery cleared up the seeming contradictions and revealed the divine order of being.

With the help which Christian Scientists receive from their textbook the study of the Bible becomes an inspiration. The seemingly dark and hidden sayings which have puzzled the aged, become clear and luminous under the searchlight of Christian Science and Christian Scientists hunt for the new and priceless gems in the stimulating pages of that dear old book, even as the miner expectantly and eagerly digs for treasure.

MRS. EDDY'S HEALING AND DISCOVERY OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

Mrs. Eddy's first knowledge of the tactic healing power came to her when, from the effects of an accident, her recovery seemed beyond all earthly hope. Her spiritual uplifting tended to inspire confidence in the power of God to heal the sick so, when man reached his extremity and failed, she turned to God to verify that early confidence. Her healing was instantaneous! From that moment the new light of Truth dawned upon her, which, in the face of Science and Health, she describes as "the effect of a sudden and the newly discovered world of Spirit."

Mrs. Eddy had discovered the law of spiritual healing and brought to bleak mankind the world that there is a comforter for every sorrow, no-ever despairing; that there is law of restoration for every loss and disease; a purification for every sin and a panacea for every ill. Incidents in the same law known to and taught by Christ Jesus, and because its operation is governed by scientific principle, Mrs. Eddy was able to make it the same law known to and taught by Christ Jesus, and because its operation is governed by scientific principle, Mrs. Eddy was able to make it a science. It is undoubtedly the "Comforter" and the "Spirit of Truth" which the Master promised would come again—and it has come to remain forever. Let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

GREAT WORKS ACCOMPLISHED BY MRS. EDDY

Mrs. Eddy brought the most timely message that has come to humanity since Jesus preached the Sermon on the Mount. Think of the battlefields of history and the losses at stake; think of your own personal struggles—business, political, moral—recall your defeats, your intrigues, your triumphs and failures; survey the work accomplished by Mrs. Eddy and ask yourselves, and answer honestly, the question, Could she have stood, say at God stood with her. Think of the sublime courage of this woman who bravely met the opposition of the whole world, struggling—without human support, criticism, scorn, ridicule, and abuse, which amounted to persecution.

She realized it was her mission to bring a healing message which was to be universal in spreading the world healing and saving Gospel, and was about it with an unwavering devotion to the cause which she was called. The influence of her teaching has been felt throughout the world. It has changed the lives of numbers of thousands of sinful, sick and despairing men, women and children, making them holier, healthier and happier, and its tender ministry goes on in ever widening channel.

The seed of her sowing bore fruit in a small organization which has grown to magnificent proportions. There is a beautiful Mother Church edifice in Boston, with many thousands of communicants, and hundreds of branch churches, and a well-ordered country on the globe. New churches and societies are being formed at the rate of one for every three and a half to four days.

When Mrs. Eddy first discovered Christian Science, she put in practice possible test, to make sure she had a demonstrable truth. After proving it for some years, and healing disease in every stage, she began to teach it to others, establishing the Christian Science College, and taught several thousands students. Mrs. Eddy is the authoress of many books upon Christian Science, chief among them that which is known as the "Christian Science text-book, Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures."

This book is the Christian Scientists authority for all that pertains to Christian Science. It is a commentary on the Bible. It explains the Scriptures. It sets forth the cause and cure of all disease and death, and reveals the hitherto unknown science of life. Thousands have been healed by reading this precious book. You may inquire how this can be. Because every sentence is a declaration of Divine Truth, and the Truth makes free as the Master declared.

There are four Christian Science publications. The Christian Science Bible Lessons, issued quarterly, are taken from the Bible, with explanatory passages from Science and Health. They furnish weekly sermons for the churches and societies and Christian Science Sentinel, a weekly publication, much help from the daily study of Science and Health, issued monthly, and the Christian Science Journal, issued weekly, each contain articles on Christian Science and testimonies of healing, contributed by the healed. The Christian Science Journal is published by the Christian Science Publishing Society, is a daily newspaper. It is an impersonal messenger, as it were—the exponent of class, not nation. It is not a sectarian paper, but a wide-awake, interesting, instructive news bearer to every home, office and place of business. You will find one article upon Christian Science in it each day. That article is food and inspiration for all who pause to read it. The rest of its pages are filled with the best, most accurate, most helpful news that can be gathered throughout the world. Bankers, brokers, men in various lines of business, travelers and diplomats in foreign lands, farmers, mechanics, professional men, politicians, sportsmen, literary men and women, interested in either branch of knowledge, irrespective of race or religion—regard it as the best newspaper ever published, and are slow to say so.

Truth is now accepted by the authorities in charge of jails and penitentiaries, where other newspapers are rejected and is passed along to the inmates, because of the good influence it can with them.

"Think of all this as the work of one woman, and the growth of only fifty years. Then approximate, if you can, what it will be in the next 50 years. Does it not give you Christian Scientists courage, renewed inspiration and added zeal to have part in such a glorious spreading of the gospel of salvation?

Christian Scientists are truly grateful for the healing of disease and sin, and the many blessings which they have experienced through the truth as revealed by Mrs. Eddy, but even these fade into insignificance compared to the better understanding of God and man's true relation to Him, which Christian Science unfolds.

CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS DO NOT WORSHIP MRS. EDDY

Christian Scientists worship God only. The imputation that they worship otherwise is wholly false. It is my greatest concern to live in strict obedience to the law as given in the First Commandment. The success of every Christian scientist depends upon it. Indeed, to have absolutely no other gods than the one infinite Mind is the rule with which all healing is accomplished.

Because of the numerous blessings which have come to them through Christian Science, Christian Scientists revere the name of Mary Baker Eddy, and love her with true sincerity and tenderness. Through her discovery of Christian Science God has made "his face to shine" upon mankind. Because Mrs. Eddy was obedient to the command "Love God above all things, the loved humanity also, and lived a life of constant, prayerful devotion to God, in order to save the fallen and lost of her fellow-beings, she sought no earthly glory or favor. All she asked was that men should hear the divine message which unlocks free.

On Hotten's island in New York harbor stands a colossal bronze statue of a woman holding aloft a lighted torch, symbolizing "Liberty enlightening the world." It is an inspiring and noble idea—a figure full of meaning, seeming to amere to the skies the liberty, well being and happiness of which she has dreamed and making light the harbor in a dim "Welcome Home" for ever returning wanderer.

Even so there is another harbor, at the entrance whereof every storm tossed man who has sailed the uncharted sea of error will find Christ-Science. The spiritual understanding of a woman holds aloft this light of Truth and liberty by which the wanderer may know and find the way to enter the "Promised Land—the peace of God passeth all understanding."

LATE WAR BULLETINS.

Russian troops have smashed through the Austrian left army near Samosch, in northern Servia, and have routed it with enormous losses. Thousands of prisoners have been taken, together with many cannon, machine guns and munitions, according to an official statement issued by the war office.

All night long troops from the south and west of France have been arriving at the capital and passing by rail around the city to the lofty ridges in the encircling fortifications to which they have been assigned. There is great activity on the part of the municipal military administration in completing the details of the plans for the defense of Paris. France is considering the advisability of moving the seat of government from Paris to Bordeaux as a precautionary measure, according to official advices received here.

The London Post officially calls attention to a statement issued by the French embassy here that the allied forces have been compelled again to fall back before the German advance in the neighborhood of La Fere, which is over twenty miles nearer to Paris than Soissons, Noyon-Le-Cateau line, where the allies reorganized after the German cross-ed the French border. Fighting is also reported at Amiens, La Fere is only a little more than sixty miles from Paris as the crow flies.

It is officially announced in Berlin that About 30,000 Russians had been taken prisoners by the Germans during the fighting in East Prussia, particularly at Gritsiburg, Hohenstein and Tannenberg. They included many officers of high rank. The German attack at these three points cut across swamps and lakes.

An official telegram received in London declares that French forces at Germans have made their appearance and the Germans are reported to be at some points they are taking the offensive against the Russians.

The London Chronicle says a Hungary correspondent sends a report that the Russian forces pursuing the German army succeeded during the contusion in entering Koenigsberg, East Prussia, on the heels of the enemy and obtaining command of the city and fortress.

It is officially announced at the subprefecture at Dieppe that a German army corps has been wiped out by General Pau's troops.

The long-dreaded German airship attack on the City of Paris has begun. An aeroplane flew over the city about 3 o'clock and dropped three bombs, injuring up the already slight damaging houses and causing intense terror among the unarmed and unprotected populace, but not killing any one. One bomb narrowly missed a military hospital when it fell in front of the Gare l'Est (Eastern railway station). After hurling the bombs the German dropped a message into the city which reads: The German army is at the gates of Paris. There is nothing for you to do but surrender. Germany is sending troops from Belgium to the east Prussia, it was reported here Saturday. The generation of German holding Prussia has been cut to 300 man.

The British and French forces after retreating from Aug. 23 to 28 have reformed their lines and resumed the offensive. The British loss is reported to have been 6,000, but 15,000 men have been sent to take their places. The battle line of the allies now runs through Laboisselle, Le Cateau and Cambrai. The Germans report that their forces have reached Quentin and are advancing from there towards the fortified positions of La Fere.

The mayor of Boulogne denies that German city has been taken by the Germans.

Official Berlin dispatches say that Germany has information that Turkey is preparing to take an active part in the war in support of Germany. This, with little doubt, will force Italy's hand and compel her to arrange herself on the side of the allies and will drive most, if not all, of the Balkan states to the same action.

THE LATE MRS. W. D. PALMER

Accompanied by the husband and two brothers—A. F. and Enos Chalupka—the remains of the late Mrs. W. D. Palmer arrived here from Minneapolis last Thursday, the funeral occurring from the residence on that date, the same afternoon.

Although most happily married and devoted to her husband and children, was to most of us dear "Josie Chalupka" who came back home and died. Since she made friends and kept them. There are very many young Charlevoix natives, schoolmates of Josie, who regard her death as a personal bereavement.

Her husband was devotedly attached to her, and to him and the brothers the sincerest sympathy of Charlevoix is given. The esteem in which this good lady was held was attested by the beautiful floral tributes.

WESTERN MICHIGAN IS VERY PROSPEROUS

Western Michigan has enjoyed this year the best growing season in the memory of living man. The amount of moisture which has been said perpetuated and the arrival of the moisture has always been at the most opportune time. In consequence, larger and better crops than ever before are being harvested. The hay, clover and vetch fields have produced more abundantly. The corn is now ready to mature, although the growing season is far from ended. The grain crops were good, as were also the early fruits. The promise for a big crop of potatoes is excellent, and the peach and apple crops, particularly in the northern section of the Western Michigan country, are all that could be asked for. As a result of this splendid season, the farmers and fruit growers are about to enjoy a prosperity that is far above the average. In the case of those with cherry crops, this prosperity is already apparent, as the fruit growers' bank accounts are almost overflowing. While the present season has been above the average, every reason in Western Michigan is a good one, and all who are willing to plant, cultivate and harvest with intelligence and industry are sure of fair returns.

METHODIST CHURCH AFFAIRS

At the Quarterly Conference of the Methodist Church of our city last Friday night an unanimous invitation was extended to the pastor, Rev. Quimby Walker, to return for another year. The church is in a most excellent condition, numerically, financially and spiritually.

The reports showing that a hundred and thirty-four have been converted during the year and more from a thousand dollars raised and paid on improvements. The Ladies' Aid Society has raised four hundred fifty-eight dollars during the year. The Epworth League and Sunday School have each made the best record in the history of those organizations.

The pastor is undecided as to his return. Dr. Walker fully merits the splendid endorsement he received from the church officials for the efficient work he has accomplished in Charlevoix.

Traverse City and Boyne City Dropped From the League

August 31st marked the demise of the Michigan State league as a six club circuit. It has died a natural and voluntary death. The vacant chairs will denote the places once occupied by Traverse City and Boyne City. A new schedule has been arranged and the remaining clubs, Cadillac, Manistee, Ludington and Muskegon, will make a desperate struggle to finish the season.

According to Boyne City men, without a dissenting voice, this was expected there. When lately the Booster aggregation refused to play with the Cadillac contingent, it was afforded the league management to hand the metropolis franchise a blow. Boyne City virtually quit, even though orders from headquarters fired them. Then Traverse City was dropped in order to even up the circuit and allow continuance of play. The cause of the turmoil in the Gilmen ranks was caused in the fact that since August 1 no salary money has been forthcoming. There-fore the players struck, and when called a telephone communication with W. S. Sloan, chief backer of the Boyne City team, Gillen was informed that no more funds could be extorted from that particular source, they decided to "stay home."

The new schedule which started Sept. 1st follows:

Boyne City forfeits all franchise rights; Traverse City is dropped and schedule arranged, Manistee at Cadillac Ludington at Muskegon, September 1; 2, 3 and 4; Ludington at Manistee, Cadillac at Muskegon, September 5, 6, and 7; Ludington at Cadillac, Manistee at Muskegon, September 8, 9 and 10; Ludington at Manistee, Cadillac at Muskegon, September 11 to 12; Muskegon at Manistee, Cadillac at Ludington, September 17 and 18; Cadillac at Manistee, Muskegon at Ludington, Sept. 19, 20.

LETTER FROM VAN PELT

Editor Sentinel:

I am not knocking any one person but I am trying to show the people of Charlevoix County that the proposed making plan is a bad, as well as a very expensive proposition, and I believe that I do possess a plan from the basis of which can be worked out a much better system than the one now in vogue. We need a road, which ought to be built and which can be worked out to East Jordan, Boyne City and back to Charlevoix, all the way around Pine Lake. The man who lives five or ten miles from this road will say, what good of the farmers have said. Well I'll not say that the farmers have said any good and he believes that what he says is true, but I don't believe it. Let I'll tell you why. If we could have such a road, it would bring with every farm adjacent to Charlevoix from Chicago, Illinois, Detroit, Grand Rapids and other southern cities at least five hundred more automobiles than there that were here this summer. This drive would make our county in time, as famous as the great drives in Europe and would bring thousands of people here, and summer hotels would be built as well as Summer houses, and new resorts would spring up all along the line. The war now ragging in Europe will set the people thinking more about their own country than ever before and when realized that our advantage of this opportunity will be the gainer. Surely no county in the State or in any other state can compare to offer as has Charlevoix, and the scenery around Pine Lake ought to satisfy the most fastidious.

We have the opportunity now to make Charlevoix County famous the world over and the farmers living five or ten miles away from the drive would certainly share in the prosperity. Hundreds of people would bring to us.

I am asked how would you pay for this road. I have a plan which I will submit later on and in the meantime I'd like to have others who may be interested to express their views and sometime in the winter I will be glad to run up and talk the matter over for it is a dead sure thing this road can be built the county can be greatly benefited and the whole surrounding country as well. All I ask at present is the support of the Charlevoix County Press. Every one can help and every little helps as the old saying is.

Geo. H. Van Pelt.

S. S. S

A storm is brewing in the vicinity of the Shiffriss Shipmasters Society Headquarters.

Capt. Pete Campbell, president of the society, (subject to protest) has been ashore much of the time this season by virtue of the entrance of his son, Capt. P. D. Junior, into the guild of Master Mariners.

It has developed that former president Capt. Billy Finucan, of the Manitou, while briefly in his home port, has made remarks that now, red blood in the Campbell clan had become necessary because of the waning mental capacity of the founder of the Universal Waterway society—that the rocks in the vicinity of Garden Island were developing now terrors for the old Master of the Beaver, etc. Of course Capt. Pete heard all about it and he is counting the days when the ship Manitou shall go into her garage, and then he proposes to have it decided whether it is the Scotch or Irish that shall rule the roast in the S. S. S.

Young Capt. Pete's name will probably be presented for membership at the first regular meeting, and it is then that Greek will meet Greek in the struggle for supremacy.

The Scotch have supported every effort to bring about reconciliation between these discordant factions but without avail. Meanwhile the Manitou and the Hoover, have this far avoided a collision—but—so—telling.

There is also considerable feeling among the members about Capt. George Hoover breaking into the pilfered game. Indeed the feeling has reached an intensity that threatens to separate the least equable of the members of the society. This feeling is, to some extent shared by the founder, whose efforts have always been in the direction of high moral ideals.

Capt. Billy Finucan, being the only democrat in the society, does not contribute very much to harmony.

But the founder is pray

SUBMARINES TO DRIVE BATTLESHIPS FROM SEAS

POSITION OF SUBMARINES OUTSIDE HARBOR

VIEW BOTTLED UP IN HARBOR BY SUBMARINES

SUBMARINE WAITING TO ATTACK

SUBMARINE SUDDENLY SUBMERGED

So eminent an authority as Admiral Sir Percy Scott of the British Navy declared the other day that the doom of the dreadnaught had been sounded by the development of submarines. He asserted unequivocally that even the superdreadnaughts were archaic and that experiments had proved conclusively that no fighting ship was safe from the attack of the submarine day or night. Why, Gen. Lyautey asks, for armorclad titans? he asked.

The pronouncement is the more impressive because Admiral Scott has probably done more than any other living naval man to make the battleship the offensive fighting machine it is today. By a system of director firing he improved the capability of making hits quite 100 per cent, and showed how. A whole battery of monster rifles could be manipulated as a unit and the tremendous salvo brought to bear upon a distant target with amazing precision. In a word, he made the dreadnaught a wonderfully formidable instrument of attack, and yet today, in the face of that unparalleled record, he says: "I see no use for battleships."

There is in this country an authority of a kindred way of thinking. Simon Lake, who has done a great deal toward making the submarine what it is. In substance, Simon Lake anticipated Admiral Sir Percy Scott by many years in predicting the passing of the heavy ships of the battle line. He was asked the other day for his opinion of the British admiral's sweeping views.

"I still believe, as I have done, that the submarine will drive the heavy armored battleship from the seas," he replied, "and that it will be the means employed by all countries with a seaboard to prevent invasion from the sea.

"The power of the battleship rests with reasonable price to the spectacular performances of its giant turret guns, and he talks you of the many inches of hardened steel that the points of his armor-piercing projectiles can perforate. Truly these things are little short of marvelous. But the advocate of the gun is a prejudiced expert, unless, for he will not believe the torpedo to be a formidable rival. Why? Simply because generally he takes little interest in this order of weapon.

"But the torpedo is coming into its own. It is an instrument of precision and stupendous destructive might. Where it could not travel more than 1,200 yards with any chance of hitting the target a few years back, it can now cover a distance of 12,000 yards and make that run at an average of nearly 30 knots.

"In some particulars it is even more accurate than the gun. It travels far enough below the surface to be unaffected by the state of the sea. With its minimum charge of wet-guncotton bursting at high explosive, attacking a ship where she is least prepared for assault, the detonation of that subaqueous will cause a far greater wound than it is possible to produce with a number of the biggest Bessemer shells.

"Yes, I think Sir Percy Scott is right, and his admission means much more because it comes from an expert who has heretofore favored the gun and the dreadnaught.

"What do I think of the submarines of the future? How big do I think they will be? Well, I have done some prophesying in the past and have been frankly ridiculed by the unbelievers, so you will understand my present reluctance to predict just how large submarines will eventually be built. There are mechanical problems that are in the process first. The development of the submarine has not been as rapid as I anticipated, and this has been due to the difficulty of securing satisfactory engines.

"The gasoline engine has been somewhat discredited as a motor for underwater boats because of the explosive character of its fuel. We have had a number of decreasing accidents due to the unexpected ignition of the fumes of gasoline. Yet, the heavy oil engine promises to meet the needs, but there has been a good deal of difficulty in securing a reliable heavy oil, reversible, internal combustion engine. Thanks to the genius of Dr. Rudolf Diesel, the way to success has been blazed, and as the heavy oil engine is perfected the speed of submarines will increase proportionately.

"As a matter of fact, we have already in mind for two or three years past Mr. Shuman has been engaged in erecting a large sun-power plant near Cairo, Egypt. In this plant he demonstrated the scheme for heating water to a moderate temperature, and returned to the earlier scheme of concentrating the rays of the sun by reflecting curved mirrors from boilers containing the water to be evaporated. Various accounts of this plant have appeared in popular scientific journals, but the first engineering analysis of it, with the results of tests thereon, was made public in a paper read in London before the Society of Engineers by A. S. K. Ackermann.

Briefly summarized, the plant erected in Egypt covered seven-eighths of an acre of ground, and the large concave mirrors were so adjusted as to focus the sun's rays upon a boiler which lasted the test was only 19.1 horsepower. While it is claimed that the low-pressure steam engine which utilized the steam did not work satisfactorily in the test, it was evident that even had the engine worked with as high a degree of efficiency as could possibly be expected, the power output would have been a mere trifle compared with the enormous cost and space occupied by the plant.

SUN POWER PLANT A FAILURE

Output, at the Best, a Mere Trifle Compared with the Enormous Cost of the Enterprise.

A great deal has been published in technical and technical journals within the past half dozen years concerning the experiments on a large scale in developing power from the sun's heat, which have been carried on by Frank Shuman, says the Engineering News.

Consulted.

"I would like to sell you a volume of the world's best poetry," said the humiliating book agent.

"You would, eh?" sneered the poet, who was just at that moment in a fine frenzy. "And do you realize that you are interrupting the muse, as the very commodity you sell?"

NATIVES OF SIBERIA

"HYU, SALMON!" IS THE CRY

More Than Hundred Tribes Share Country With Russians.

Indians Go to Canneries for the Opening of the Season in the Northwest.

People Nomadic in Their Tendencies—Hunting, Fishing and Tending Their Flocks and Herds Being Principal Occupations.

Tobita, Trans-Baikalia, Siberia.—The average man back at home in civilized parts of the world does not realize that some less a hundred tribes and nations share Siberia with the Russians. He has merely a vague idea that some nondescript nation called Tartars dwell, or used to dwell, in northern Asia.

It is only quite recently, moreover, that the ethnological world has realized that the American Indian has migrated in three parts; the visit of Professor Hrdlicka, of the Smithsonian, two years ago was one of the first evidences America has shown of her intention to delve into the numerous and rich and interesting field for research that Siberia offers to the student of the origin of peoples.

So numerous are these Siberian folk that it takes you some little time to recollect just their sonorous names, let alone their characteristics—Buryats, and Orinankhai Dzakhas and Soyotes, Karagassns and Sekai, Tartars, Potonoeans and Kizilskoe Tartars, Gilikis and Dolgans, Tchouvantes and Yakuts, and Tungus, and Samoyeds, and Ostiaks, and Kamasinzes, Mordves and Teptiares, Mesheres and Tachkhirs, Lapsies and Alonzas, Kuiliss and Ischmens, Kamschadales and Koriaks, Chukhsi and Namolis, Daurians and Manzi, Gholds and Tofi, Mansyres and Olenyzes, Orotches and Mansons, Oroks and Oitchas, Nigilsdais and Orotchones, Nanikonas and Samaitis, Hiaskas and Tatsmis, Samoyedes and Voguls, Toongusses, Boniats and the rest.

They come from Pkan and Mongol and Turk stock, but most of them have intermarried to such an extent that it is well-nigh impossible to trace the genealogy back to any one nation. Nomad folk for the most part, hunting and fishing and tending their flocks and herds, wandering from pasture to pasture as expounded by their "shemans," or medicine men, living on reindeer, carrying life of the American Indian. Like the American Indian, many of them are diminishing in numbers, however, killed off by the diseases introduced by the white man. Only three or four of the most populous races—the Yakuts, Boriats and Tungusses—are holding their own. The Yakuts, indeed, who live along the banks of the great River Lena for a few hundred miles north and south of the Arctic circle, are actually shouldering Russian aside. As you know, her marries a Yakut woman the family tends to become Yakut in the second generation. The Yakuts, living up in the frozen wilds of northeastern Siberia, talk practically the same language as the Turk in Constantinople.

FOUR DAYS WITHOUT WATER

Pitiable Plight of Woman With Broken Leg Relieved by Returning Daughter.

White Lake, S. D.—Lying for four days with a broken leg and unable to call to passers by or to reach food or water, was the experience of Mrs. Matilda, a woman nearly eighty years of age, living 17 miles south of this place.

The daughter who lived with her mother had been absent for some time, taking treatment for a strained ankle.

One night, in the darkness Mrs. Dethlefs stepped through a trapdoor which she had neglected to close after coming from the cellar, where she had taken refuge from a thundering windstorm.

Although suffering from a leg broken above the knee in the fall, Mrs. Dethlefs crawled from the cellar, but had no way of letting anyone know of her situation, as the house has no telephone and was invisible from the unfrequented road.

At noon four days afterward the crow were able to take the only out the cooning tower; but notwithstanding this when I proposed to them the last they might go over on the roof they liked they again asked permission to remain on the submarine."

"Yes, the underwater craft are coming into their own."

The ONLOOKER

HENRY HOWLAND

Two Souls With but a Single Thought

"I would I were a bird," she sang;
The young man Rogers' ear
She gave the keys full many a bang
That he was loath to hear.

She sang with all the might she had,
But with a lack of art,
And notwithstanding she made him glad,
Though he was sad at heart.

She frequently got off the key,
Her intonation was
Not perfect, mind her back, but she Was ignorant of that.

"I would I were a bird," she bawled,
"I'd be a happy one!"
"Would, indeed, you were," he called,
"And get me out and west.

What He Needed.

"Doctor," asked the caller, who had just been ushered into the reverend gentleman's study, "have you any objection to marrying divorced people?"

"No unalienable objection," the minister replied. "Of course I am sorry that people ever have to be divorced. Still, I am broad-minded enough to grant that there may be cases where divorce may be a real blessing."

"Thank you. It was so in my case and also in the case of the lady whom I am to marry. There is another question I desire to ask you. Would you object to performing the marriage ceremony where dogs were brought in to act as bridesmaids?"

"Does the lady whom you intend to marry wish to have dogs as bridesmaids?"

"Yes."

"And you desire to marry her, just the same?"

"Yes."

"My dear sir, you don't want a preacher. What you need is a commission in lunacy."

A Futile Dream.

I know a peaceful, leafy dell
Where cooing doves do coo;
Where happy feathered songsters dwell,
Or should, mind, are so.
And one serenely wanders there
Who dreams of all my pains
When I possessed no worldly care
And had boyish wains.

Ah, gladly I would linger yet
Within that leafy dell,
Far from the scenes where people fret
And children cry in wants—
Ah, would that yonder I might fare
As of old I used!
But if I did I'd find her there,
And she I love no more.

When Astronomers Convene.

A young man who recently tore himself away from this part of the country to become identified with Pomona in Pasadena, Cal., writes:

"I am reporting an astronomers' convention at Mount Wilson this week. Don't ask me why. I don't know. It is known this film was the first one ever made of the operations in an orchard.

"In a few days I shall be made showing the harvesting of a Michigan style orchard. In another camera, the same sort of pictures will be taken in Michigan strawberry fields, hay fields, and fields of other crops. And, in fact, everywhere that there is a possibility of securing a scene that will help emphasize the importance of the greatest of all industries, agriculture.

A UNIQUE SCHOOL.

A school that promises to be quite unique in Michigan education parlance is that which is being built at Hackley. This school is to serve two townships in Wexford county, Hancock and Wexford, and two townships in Grand Traverse county, Grand and Marion, and is to be built at a cost of $12,000.

The bonds for the school were voted last March, but were not disposed of until recently when Judge

FRUIT INDUSTRY IN MICHIGAN SHOWN IN MOVING PICTURES

Cherry Harvest, Morgan Orchards, Traverse City.

By H. J. DANIELS.

During the coming winter the story of northern Michigan as an ideal fruit country will be told by lectures and moving pictures in various parts of the United States. The cherry will take an important part in that campaign of education.

The story that was put on the reel in the Grand Traverse region this summer is that of the delights and healthfulness of the outdoor life that goes with the cherry harvest. The moving picture camera is set up among the trees and an accurate record of the movements gone through with in the picking of cherries is obtained, also a scene which shows how the cherries are carried to the packing shed, in crates, and how, from these are picked over and put into cases, the cases labeled, loaded into wagons and hauled to the iced cars.

The Morgan fruit farm was chosen as a field of operations, and over 125 pickers were at work on the day the pictures were taken. The Morgan farm is the largest bearing cherry orchard in the state, and was the place of all places where cherry operations could be successfully observed.

The films were taken cast by John I Gibson, secretary of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, and were shown by him. The good that is expected to come from this bit of educational work for western Michigan can hardly be estimated. It may be known this film was the first one ever made of the operations in an orchard.

"Oh, Mrs. Uppington, I was so sorry to read about your trouble with the chickens and the cyclone," she said. "You papers said you had to give up nearly $5,000 worth of them and that you had sowed to your corset."

"But was nearly ruined. The papers are always misrepresenting things. I had it fastened to my chemise."

His Only Affliction.

"Have you ever had writer's cramp?" asked the humorist wisdom.

"No," replied the poet, "but I've often had writer's itch."

"Writer's itch! What is that?"

"It's a trouble that consists of the blinking of the stomach around the spine, due to nonpay."

Not Enthusiastic.

"Have you ever been best man at a wedding?"

"Once."

"Did you enjoy it?"

"Well, I wouldn't get up in the middle of the night to repeat the performance."

His Status.

"So you think his wife is the man of the house?"

"Well, perhaps she isn't exactly that; but he's a sort of second girl around the place."

Prosperity.

"I see that Doctor Cutter has bought a new automobile."

"Yes; he has a rich patient with muscular rheumatism."

Worthy Trying.

"If a man can't depend on his friends, whom can he depend on?"

"He might try himself for a change."

RICH MAN'S SPARTAN CODE

Would Kill Deformed and Invalid Children—Whipping for Criminals is Also Favored.

St. Louis.—D. D. Lee, one of the leading merchants of this city, has issued a letter to the public from his summer home in Kennebunkport, Me., containing an expression of radical sentiments on various subjects. Here are some of his views:

"I am in favor of the whipping-post in the every state in the Union for wife-beaters and all other petty criminals, on when fall sentences are imposed. This class of criminals cares but little for bail sentences, as they are better fed while in than when out of jail, and they keep on committing the same crimes over and over again.

"I am sophistically in favor of the question of capital punishment for assaults on women.

"For humanity's sake I am in favor of putting to death all children who come into the world hopeless invalids or badly deformed.

"I would kill off the worst criminals and all the idiots and invalids.

"I would have a law that would make the taxpayers in the districts that would be taxed because of the building of the school (if such be secure an injunction prohibiting the trustees of the unit school district from selling the bonds, but the court refused to grant even a temporary injunction.

The Hanover Unit school high school, the name of the proposed new building, will be a model in every way, and students in that section of the state will be able to attend high school without going to Cadillac or Traverse City or Alanson, as in other years. There will be a fireproof laboratory, a gymnasium, a general session room, five class rooms, and other rooms in the large building. Likely some system of fastening up the children will be established during the winter months.

Work on clearing up the school site has been started already at Buckley, and it is hoped the school can be opened before late winter. However, because of the delay due to the taking of the bond issue into the courts the school may not be opened for a year. Pickney's high school has been condemned, and for the reason every effort will be made to finish the new school, or a section of it, for use this year.

TO CUT COST OF LIVING.

A party of Pittsburgh business men have plans made for the purchase of land in Lake county, Michigan, through which they hope to cut down the high cost of living, and incidentally turn a tidy profit for themselves.

The Pittsburgh gentlemen have evolved the plan for co-operative farming and the operation of a corporation farm, which it is believed will prove of immeasurable benefit not only to the members of the corporation, but to Lake county, which has been chosen as the field of operation.

The plan provides first for the purchase of 1,000 acres of land which is to be operated by the company for the products shipped direct to its stockholders at cost, plus only the actual cost of raising, which will be small compared with city prices, and in addition to his interest in the corporation farm each member will purchase on easy payments a four-acre farm tract, for which he will receive a deed. Those four-acre tracts are to be grouped into 40 or 80 acre farms and a family selected to settle on each one of these farms and improve, cultivate and set out to fruit each owner's four-acre tract, for which they will pay a small monthly cash consideration besides a share of the crops.

This plan makes farmers by proxy of the owners, who remain in town while those who come out to the land to improve their own tracts and farm the adjoining ones will receive the cooperation of the owners in the way of cash payments of a dollar or two a month from each one, which in addition to the crops raised will make farm life pleasant and successful, and eliminate the disadvantages that usually have to be met and overcome by the settler in improving a new farm.

The Cutler farms just north of Luther, in Lake county, embracing 1,000 acres, have been contracted by the company for the corporation farm, which clearly indicates that the company is after the best, as no better farm in all Michigan could be found.

Members of the corporation are I. D. Warrington of the General Electric company, W. G. Conkrite of Pittsburgh, H. O. Putnam of West Jefferson, O., J. F. Johnson of Hagerstown, Md., Dr. E. M. Clifford of Greensburg, Pa.

The Cutler farms are now under cultivation, and with their crops and orchards should provide enough of the staples of life for thousands of families at a very small cost of production.

NEW FEED CONCERN.

A $25,000 corporation has been formed by Cash A. Harris of New York, a former Mt. Pleasant boy, now in business in the eastern city, and Ralph Harris of Mt. Pleasant, for the purpose of growing, importing and selling at wholesale and retail flower and vegetable seeds, bulbs and nursery stock.

Many varieties of seeds are already ordered, especially those grown in Denmark, Holland and Germany, as well as fall bulbs from Holland and France.

Seed trial grounds will be established in Isabella county and in New York. Some of land have been purchased in Suffolk county, Long Island, apparently adapted to the raising of certain varieties of garden and flower seeds.

An experiment worker from one of the large eastern seed houses will handle all testing, and every variety of seed is to be carefully tested before being put into packets.

Both Ralph Harris and C. A. Harris have spent a great deal of time this summer at the various seed houses and trial gardens in the East, as well as at the bureau of plant industry at Washington and the government trial farms at Arlington.

The gentlemen state that the seed contracts have been placed with reliable firms, and contracts will supply the largest seed houses in the country and the United States government seeds. The firm has also contracted a large part of the output of one of the best eastern nurseries and in addition to using this stock to fill catalogue orders will be able to supply any desired fruit or ornamental tree or shrub to a large trade.

HARVEST BIG APPLE CROP.

Oregon does not contain all the big orchards of apples. A Waterville, R. H. Sherwood has commenced the harvesting of the biggest crop of apples he has immense orchards have ever produced. He has been picking Yellow Transparents for two weeks, while the real harvest of Duchess apples is just now under way.

Mr. Sherwood has sold the entire crop of Duchess, estimated at 1,000 barrels, to a firm of buyers in Chicago. The Duchess will be followed in succession by big crops of all and winter apples, and from now on until snow flies, the Lake View orchardist will be one of the busiest places in all the great fruit belt of southern Michigan.

WHERE A RECORD IS BEING MADE IN ALFALFA.

Marvin Farm, Holton, Mich.

A field of alfalfa always looks good, but the field that cuts 33 tons to ten acres, and that in the last half of the season, with two more coming this season looks very good. That is the record being made this year on the Marvin farm, near Holton, Mich., a plant in which in the future there will make almost any layman wish he were a farmer and that he understood alfalfa, as it must be understood on the Marvin farm. The success of alfalfa on that farm in the last few years has been a great advertisement for that crop, and the result has been that many more farmers in that part of the state have taken up the culture of that crop resulting in many other businesses being checked up for alfalfa.

MAKES GAME FLIGHT.

Grand Rapids, with a single dole of a speech from the convention of the International Apple Shippers Association, contributed a game fight for the 1915 convention and received votes out of the election being Chicago, that city receiving but a few more votes than Grand Rapids. New York city, Niagara Falls and a half dozen other cities bid for the convention for two weeks, while the delegates to attendance at the convention represented in the city was did not live yellow or will during the summer, and I had a very fine crop. It is the year I have ever seen. I propose prepare the ground for a crop.

Deep Tiling Machine.

The deep tiling machine I bought last year I tried out side by side with a moldboard plow in my potato and cornfields, sure a winner in an change. The remarkably increased yield where the deep tiler was used fully justifies the expense. The increase on ground tempered in this way did not show in the yield of apples, but the increase in the yield of potatoes

Entertainment and Instruction For Children—A Game That Tests the Memory—Some Facts About the Blustering Month of March.

It has long been the custom among the rich people of New York to provide ways and means for raising funds to help the needy. Every winter they give balls, dances, theatrical entertainments etc. with this worthy purpose in view. Recently a series of tableaux were given in which children took the leading parts. Some of the little folks were dressed and posed to represent noted paintings, while others posed as famous individuals. One of the best of these was the impersonation of George Vittoria, first Duke of Buckingham, a famous courtier of the reign of Charles I. Master Walter Maynard personed this character, and those who have ever seen a picture of that old time gentleman will agree that Master Maynard made a pretty looking duke.

One Off Or.

This is a game of memory in which you pay forfeits for mistakes and also for laughing.

The players sit in a circle. One begins by saying seriously, "One off or opening oysters." Everybody repeats this in turn. Then the leader again, "One old ox opening oysters; two tired turtles trotting to Trenton." This goes round the circle. The next is, "One old ox opening oysters; two tired turtles trotting to Trenton; three lame tigers taking tea." This is repeated by each one, beginning always with "One old ox" and adding a new alliteration each time. Some examples are given here, but it is more fun to make them up as you go along.

"Four fat friars falling for frogs."

"Seven salmon selling sealskins."

"Ten tuftum tomcats traveling tandem."

"Eight elegant engineers eating early eggs."

"Nine tall tinkers toiling tremendously."
